"Did he use any misrepresentations for the purpose of preventing you from reading it?"

"No, he didn't say anything, only asked me to sign it."

"And you could have read it first?"

"I suppose I could."

"Why didn't you, as a matter of fact?"

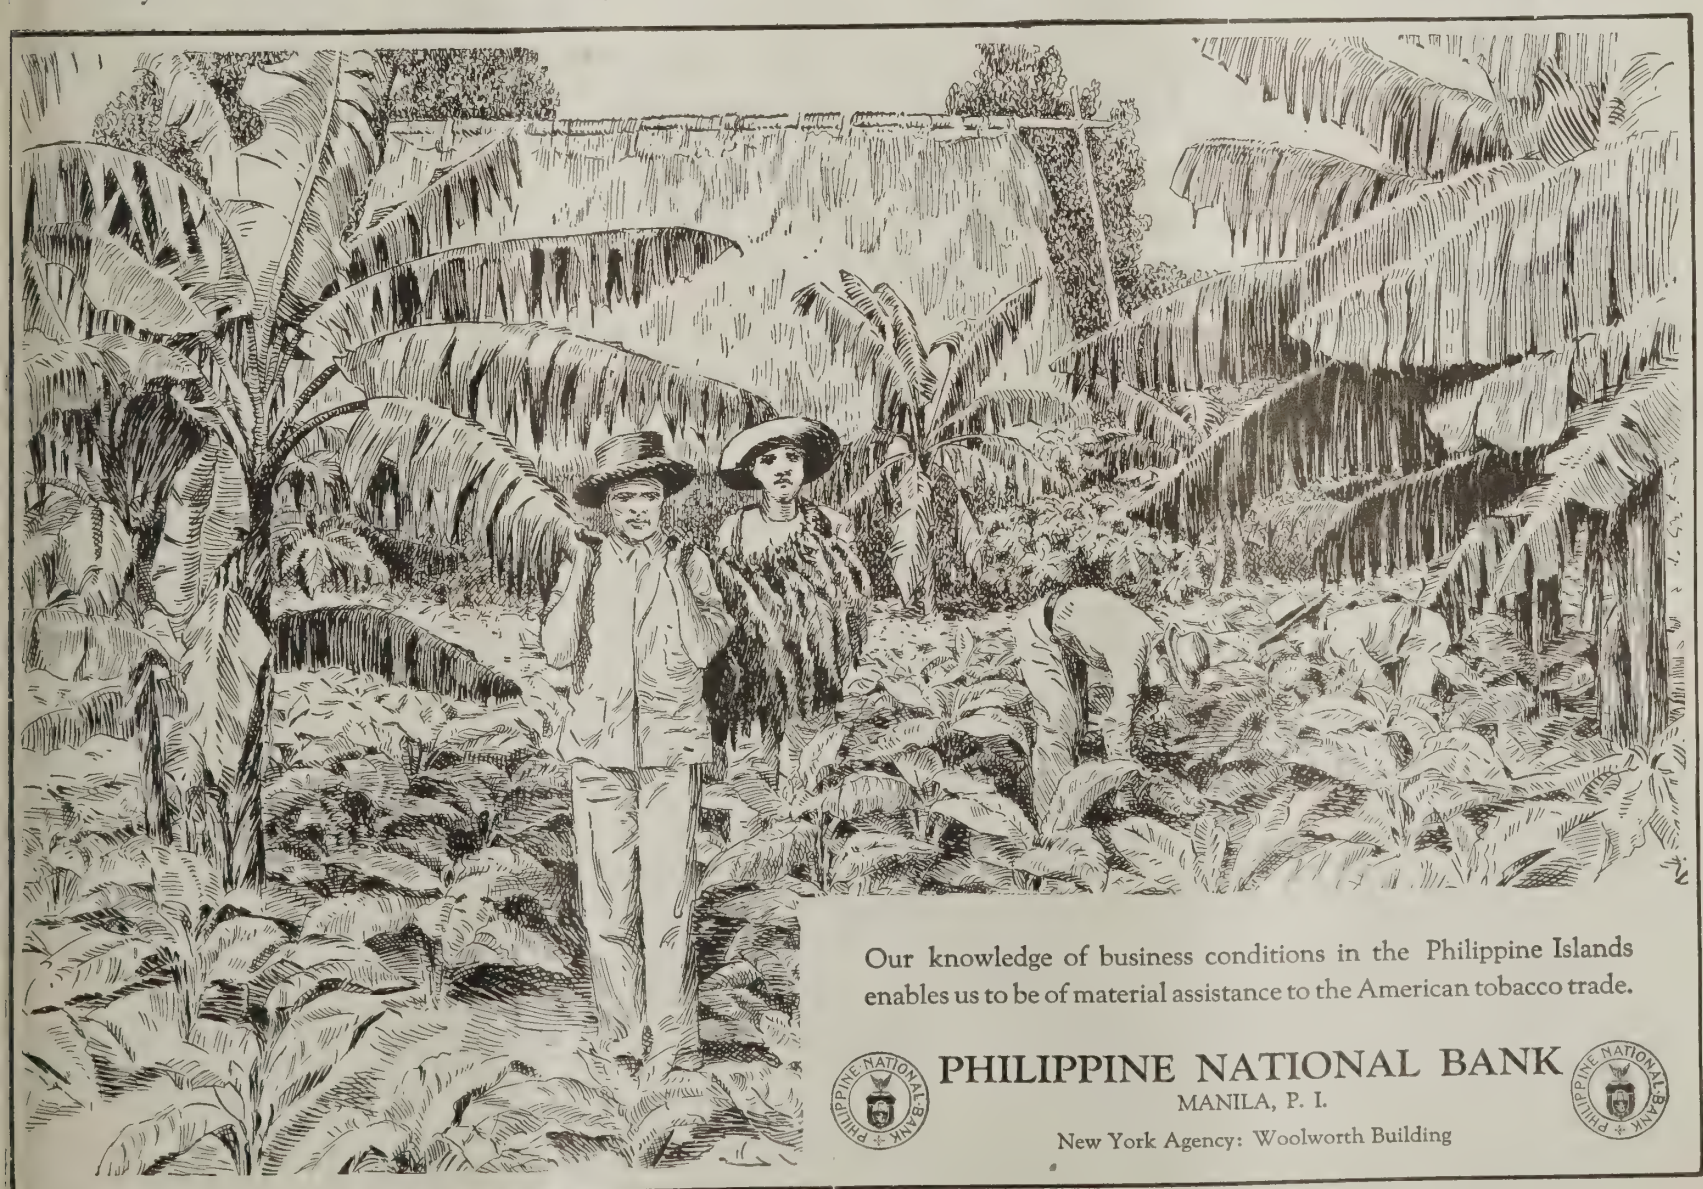
"Well, I thought it was only for a week instead of a year."

The facts being thus clear, there was nothing to do but to tell the client that he was liable on the contract. Here is a little law on the subject from leading cases which every reader hereof can profitably read over several times:

From a high authority on contract law:

As a written contract is the highest evidence of the terms of an agreement between the parties to it, it is the duty of every contracting party to learn and know its contents before he signs and delivers it. He owes this duty to the other party to the contract, because the latter may, and presumably will, pay his money and shape his action in reliance upon the agreement. He owes it to the public, which as a matter of public policy, treats the written contract as a conclusive answer to the question, "What was the agreement?" Hence the courts do not permit one to avoid a contract into which he has entered, on the ground that he did not attend to its terms, that he did not read the document which he signed, that he supposed it was different in its terms, or that it was a mere form.

From a leading Pennsylvania case:



If a party who can read will not read a deed (or contract) put before him for execution, or if unable to read, will not demand to have it read or explained to him, he is guilty of supine negligence, which, I take it, is not the subject of protection, either in equity or in law.

From a United States Court case:

It will not do for a man to enter into a contract and when called upon to respond to its obligations, to say that he did not read it when he signed it, or did not know what it contained. If this were permitted contracts would not be worth the paper on which they were written. But such is not the law. A contractor must stand by the words of his contract, and if he will not read what he signs, he alone is responsible for his omission.

There is really but one chance of escape to a man who signs a contract, or an order, or any paper involving an obligation, without reading it. If the solicitor, with the evident intention of preventing him from reading the paper, makes some fraudulent representation about it, then he has a chance to repudiate it on the

SLOW SHIPMENTS CAUSE CIGAR SHORTAGE

It Took 82 Days for a Consignment of William Penns to Go from Philadelphia to San Francisco—"Mollie" Hull Reports on Conditions in the Northwest—Elam May Take a Trip to the Philippines—Judell & Co. Inaugurate a Tom Moore Campaign.

San Francisco, February 27.—Congested freights, and shortage of output in the eastern factories due to labor conditions is having a serious effect upon the cigar trade of this city and State. The supply is falling behind the demand, and it has now become a case of production and not of selling. So serious has the shortage become that M. A. Gunst & Co. have laid off their sales force for a period of two months in order to catch up with orders. While no other distributor has as yet taken a like drastic action there is a very serious shortage felt by all of them and in some brands and sizes their shelves are bare. As an example of the slowness of deliveries H. L. Judell & Co. report that they have just received a case of Little William Penn's which were shipped from Philadelphia eighty-two days ago. "Mollie" Hull, of the General Cigar Co., says that he knows of cases of shipments which took two months from New York to Chicago, and while most of the delay has been between these two cities there has also been serious delay from Chicago to the River. Even allowing two weeks for the latter and a reasonable time for the balance of the trip to the Coast it would seem as if the Little William Penn shipment is nearly a record.

"Mollie" Hull, who covers the territory from Denver west, tells an interesting story of conditions in Montana and Idaho, where the despised penny is held in even lower esteem than on the Pacific Coast. He says that the Six Cent cigar is going well in that territory. The dealers have taken the public into their confidence and shown it the necessity of charging more than five cents for the old nickel cigar. They have used printers' ink freely to show the injustice of doubling the price, and have dwelt upon the necessity of the "penny as an equalizer," in order that the consumer may have a square deal. He says that those dealers who were the pioneers in this movement are now reaping the benefit of the stand which they took. Of the northwest, Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, he says that the 7 cent cigar is very popular. Throughout all his territory he finds the Tom Moore and Robert Burns going better than ever.

The M. Bercovich Co., is getting ready to take off its coat and get into the 6 cent game with all the power of its twelve stores. As soon as enough stock arrives to warrant the move the 6 cent cigar will be featured in a prominent place on the counters and this cigar will be given the right of way.

One of the results of the freight congestion and the advance in the price of standard brands of cigars has been that the retail dealers everywhere have had a chance to move the dead stock which has been on their shelves for many months and in some cases for years. As a consequence the cigar stores in the future will have nothing but good sellers and in this way the unusual conditions prevailing the past few months have been a blessing in disguise.

E. M. Ealam, representing the La Minira factory of Manila and one of the best known men in the trade, is contemplating a trip to Manila with a view of extending his connections.

Elliott R. Jacobs, of Melbourne, Australia, managing Director of the States Tobacco Co., of that place, is visiting San Francisco with his family on his way back home from a five months' visit to the eastern part of this country and a trip to Havana, where it is understood he made heavy purchases for his house.

H. J. Judell & Co. announce that E. C. Hull, of the General Cigar Co., is going to make a special campaign in this State in the interest of the Tom Moore ten cent and two for a quarter cigars. Mr. Hull will spend a time with each of the Judell salesmen in their territory and will give them a special course of instruction along the line of selling talk plan devised by the company to popularize these cigars.

Some of the cigar shipments arriving over the Santa Fe are arriving with a serious shortage and it is evident that a considerable pilfering is going on somewhere along that line. One distributor has twelve claims for shortage against the railroad company and others have nearly as many.

H. L. Judell & Co. say that they will far exceed the quota of sales in the Fighting Bob which they set for themselves when they took over the agency. The T. & O. roughs are also going remarkably well, even better at 6 cents than they did at 5 cents. The company is displaying an interesting poster labelled "Welcome Arrival" showing a group of soldiers opening a box from home and taking out first a box of cigars.

H. P. Eakin, manager of the M. A. Gunst Branch in San Francisco has resigned after a number of years service and has purchased the jobbing business of the Capital City Tobacco Co., of Sacramento, from William Bercovich. Eakin was succeeded in the Gunst Co., by Harry Jones, who is well known to the country and country trade.

Emil Judell is just back from a trip to the different forts and to Camp Fremont. He reports that a number of new Exchange stores are opening up in the latter place, and that his whole trip was very successful.

Milton Glass of the same company is now in Fresno and finds that business has increased there wonderfully since the rains of the last week have given assurance of good crops in that section.

J. L. Pincus of Pincus Bros., New York, specializing in high grade Turkish cigarettes, is visiting the trade in San Francisco. He is very pessimistic over the outlook for renewals of the supply of Turkish tobacco.

Henry Mack, manager of the Farmers Co-operative Store at Mintern, Nev., heavy buyers of cigars and tobacco, was visiting the trade in this city recently.

Sol Arkush, of Welcher Bros., has been booking some very satisfactory business in this city.

Utilizing Motor Trucks

It is estimated that there are in the country 400,000 trucks. Most of these are in use in cities, but practically all of them, authorities say, could be released for interurban service by converting into light trucks, by the substitution of new bodies, a sufficient number of our 4,000,000 passenger cars to replace the trucks on city streets. The commandeering of one-tenth of the passenger cars in the country for commercial purposes would find precedent in the much more drastic requisitioning of automobiles in other countries for war purposes.

American makers turned out last year something like 90,000 trucks. At the same time they were manufacturing passenger cars, and for a portion of the year munitions and aeroplanes. Towards the end of the year, production was somewhat slackened by the fuel shortage. Closing down of plants for days at a time was not unusual.

In the months to come, building of motor trucks may easily be as important as building of ships. It may become, for the time being, tremendously more important than fabrication of aeroplanes. It is conceivable, then, that a situation might arise in which the country would "speed up" manufacture of trucks to the limit of its capacity, in which every plant that could turn them out would be put at that work, in which the Government would stipulate that such factories were to be served first in the matter of fuel and materials so there would be no more shutdowns.

The number of trucks which could be turned out under such conditions is problematical. One company estimates that America, under pressure, could produce from 350,000 to 500,000 commercial vehicles in 1918. Automobile men say that the using of entire plants in the making of trucks would mean the installation of much new equipment, a great deal of that used in the manufacture of passenger cars being unsuited to the making of trucks. It was much easier to shift from passenger cars to aeroplanes.

The American public is now receiving two great object lessons as to the possibilities of motor trucks. One of them, the "drive-away" of 30,000 military trucks destined for Europe, does not lack elements of the spectacular. The trucks are going by their own power from the plants where they were assembled, plants in Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York, and delivering themselves at seaboard ready for shipment. They are also delivering 90,000 tons of freight three tons for each car. It would require 2250 railroad cars to haul that freight to tidewater, and it would take 15,000 more cars, with a capacity of 600,000 tons, to carry the trucks themselves.

The second of these lessons is the extension of the use of motor trucks in mail service. The Post Office Department announced a short while ago that within perhaps the next three months many new motor truck parcel post routes would be in operation in various parts of the country, these routes aggregating between three and four thousand miles. One chain of routes will extend from Portland, Maine, to New Orleans.

The truck in the interurban service may find its greatest field of usefulness in the transportation of food supplies. Were all other means to fail us, the automobile could keep the people in food.

It is not impossible that the railroads of the United States may have to adopt a plan somewhat similar to the embargo established by the English roads on all shipments of freight between points less than 40 miles apart. Some of the men working at the transportation problem believe this is likely to happen. If it did happen, deliveries of food supplies to millions of persons would, so far as the railroads are concerned, be stopped. Cities could not draw upon the territory surrounding them. Small communities could not get the supplies for which they depend upon cities. Motor trucks could fill this gap in rail transportation, and because they could fill it is a reason which leads many to believe such an embargo may be established. It would be one of the most practicable ways of doing the thing that must be done—relieve the railroads. In an emergency, a fleet of trucks supplied New York hotels daily with fresh meats from Philadelphia, and not long ago a Washington merchant, confronted by delays in railroad shipments, went to New York in his passenger car and brought back urgently needed supplies. The food trail of the automobile may reach some day into every city, every village, every household.—The Nation's Business.

HAWAII BUYS MORE TOBACCO

The export trade of the mainland of United States with Hawaii toward the close of last year was on an extensive scale so far as manufactured tobacco products are concerned, according to the latest available Government statistics. With the exception of plug tobacco, outgoing shipments to Hawaii during October, 1917, showed material gains over the corresponding month last year, while the record for 10 months of the calendar year indicates the stability of the year's trading.

The total value of all manufactured tobacco products exported to Hawaii during October, 1917, was $95,693, an increase over October, 1916, of $41,663, or 77 per cent. In this increase were represented gains of 1,569,000 cigarettes, or 49 per cent; 458,000 cigars and cheroots, or 294 per cent; and 32,322 lbs. smoking tobacco, or 50 per cent, as contrasted with the corresponding month of the preceding year, and a decrease of 4,081 lbs. of plug tobacco, or 54 per cent.

The record for 10 months of the year 1917 shows a total valuation of $871,750, an increase of $168,732, or 24 per cent. The shipments for the 1917 period show the following comparisons in contrast with the same period of 1916; cigarettes increased 26,832,000, or 80 per cent; cigars and cheroots increased 862,000 or 39 per cent; plug tobacco decreased 11,195 lbs. or 10 per cent; smoking tobacco increased 124,814 lbs. or 15 per cent.

The following is a summary of the shipments of tobacco products from the United States to Hawaii during the month of October, 1917, the corresponding month of the previous year, and 10 months of both the calendar years 1917 and 1916:

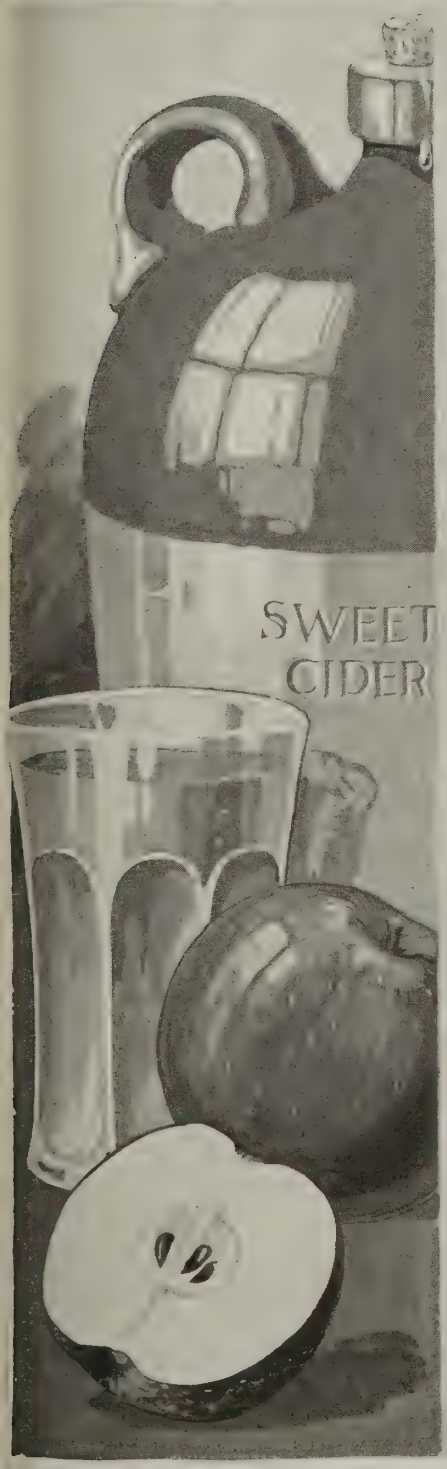
CONSERVATION.

What would you think of a merchant who made it a practice several times a day to throw into the waste basket some article of stock more or less valuable? What would you think of a banker who made it a practice several times a day to go to his office window and throw into the street a half dollar or a dollar bill?



Whatever you think, you must agree that such a man would not be considered a shrewd, far-seeing business man. And yet, this is exactly what any man does who devotes his time to unprofitable thought or effort.

Is your earning capacity $1,200 per year? If it is, your time is worth just 1 cent a minute. When you waste 10 minutes you throw away 10 cents. If your earning capacity is $2,500 a year, 10 minutes wasted means 20 cents gone, and if you are a $5,000 man, your time is worth $2.50 an hour.

Every man wastes time—every man always will waste time, but each man who reads this can, if he will, waste less time than he does. And if the time he saves he devotes to right thinking, he will find that the time thus utilized will give him the greatest return of any of the minutes he spends.—Field Notes.

The postal savings on deposits in the New York Post Office, which covers Manhattan and The Bronx, are now $30,000,000 and the number of depositors on February 1 was 154,592. There was an increase of $118,515 in deposits during January.

Shouting for the Interest of Dealers Up-State

New York State Capitol District,
March 4, 1918.

Fire was discovered in the Mill street plant of R. Whalen & Co., tobacco manufacturers in Rochester, on Wednesday morning last. Before the firemen got control the entire five-story building was wrecked. Several close shaves of the escaping employes resulted in injury to a few, who were hurt slightly. Among them was Louis Whalen, of the firm, while helping his folk get to the street. He also was cut and burned during the rush to the air. Estimated damage is placed at $120,000. Whalen's Scrap was the leading brand of the house.

"Whadyethink uv th' Red Guard?" axed Benny, as he changed th' price stickers on the cigarette bins from 16 to 18 cents, net cash. "Say! Didcha notis th' dif' 'tween th' Red Guard an' th' White? All th' fellers wit' th' red ribbons on the'r coats looked kinda income-taxi like. An' th' White guys!—well, they seemed to be in immediate need of new soles, heels, an' haircuts!

"Uh-huh, them red robbins were all semi-prosperous hotel-an'-beer men, wit' quite a fair sprinklin' of jess common cusses lik' wine agents an' cigar men. But th' milky-white bunch marched up th' Hill las' Tuesday afternoon wit' grim determinashun 'round th' chin an' tooth line for th' battle on prohibition in th' Assembly Chamber.

"Led by Big Bill Bryan, an' odder welsh-juice boys an' girls, th' fight to 'bolshevik booze was started wit' a whang! Then Sammy Gompers riz up. My, my, but he didn't 'prove a-tall 'bout what Bryan said in his sermon. No, sir, Sammy, th' cigarmaker, wit' th' help of Jo Bailey, som'time Senator f'om th' kingdom of Colonel House, jess pitched right inter Bill an' his White Wings!

"Things were said rough-like, an' Jolly-Jim Emerson, Senator-Chairman of th' meetin', sorter lost his smile som'times, tryin' to mak' th' Red an' White Armies cut th' clinchin'. After goin' o'er th' top an' gassin' one 'nother for nigh onter six solid hours, th' donnybrook broke up f'om lack of eats an' drinks.

"So I gently removed th' W. C. T. U. dame leanin' on me port shoulder, while at th' same time kindly requestin' th' beverwyck-brewer to man th' capstan on his starboard anchor, jess so I could git back here to th' Hot Chair Club, an' resume tendin' bar at th' six-cent segar section, where I'm so well an' favrubly known as Benny, th' Bar-Boy."

Touchin' on an' appertainin' to th' liquor trade, the import unofficial figures for last year show a remarkable decrease from the previous report. For instance, champagne imported last year went from 239,000 dozen quarts to 167,000. Malt liquors and gins fell off proportionately. And the reason tobacconists are not obtaining chewing gum is evident from the chicle import decrease from one to two million pounds in two years.

Swingin' inter th' office one day with a big bunch o' orders, Tom McGowan felt kinda inflooenshul like. So he says, says he, suggestin' sumthin' good: "Why wouldn't it be a big idear to change th' name of Prexy tobacco? Call ita—call ita—oh, I can't think of a name jus' now! But we can dope it out bime-by!"

"What!" yelled Boss McEwan, "change the name of Prexy with all those valuable tin boxes back there in work? I guess not! No, sir! But I'll tell you what you can do, Tom. Think of a title for a new cigarette. Get some strong, snappy stuff! For we're going to get out a brand of good cigarets the very next thing we do!"

And, sure enough, the Payn Tobacco Co. has ordered a pile of cigarette machinery! Just what the label or nom de plume will be neither Boss McEwan, Tom McGowan nor none of the other boys in the Albany plants on Broadway have registered an' copyrighted yet!

Still, the floor of the North Albany office is some days knee-deep with scratch-pad paper! Each an' every sheet contains some fine brain-storm, though the real honest-to-goodness million dollar brand name hasn't been hitched to the post for the currycomb an' brush action up to the time Tom McGowan got outa bed this yere mornin'.

In the upper Broadway factory of the Andora Cigar Company, formerly the Payn plant, about fifty girls are now working on the new suction-table system. Andora cigar prices are considerably lower in quantity lots since the new plans and schedules went into effect with the reopened shop.

"Say, Duker," opened up Boss Locke, of the A. T. Co. staff, "why don't you take a few samples of Liberty and Five Brothers in addition to your Durham-Tuxedo outfit? You can sell a lot of Liberty around here I know. And the Five Brothers brand goes fine with the foreign sections. Load 'er up, an' see what you can do."

So A. N. Duker, who stirs the sugar, started out. Yes, every retailer had Durham and Tuxedo. But they'd buy some more. "Now," counselled Duker, bringing his field artillery to the front at a gallop, "you'd better try some of this Five Brothers tobacco. It's an old-established long cut smoking an' chewing of ours which sells big in——"

"Yes, yes," interrupts the dealer. "I know about Five Brothers. It's good stuff, an' all that, but my trade wants what you see on the shelves here."

"Well, then, Mr. Dealer," Duker goes right on, just as though he had the floor of the Civic Forum, "here's a piece of goods which goes right in with the stock you have there. It's our famous Liberty bra——"

"Put on the market by the Liberty Loan Committee?" innocently inquires the merchant. "Does the Government get credit for the sale an' profit of the tobacco?"

"Hardly that," smiles Duker, thinking of his recent experiences selling Thrift Stamps, "hardly that. But you'll get credit for selling a rattling fine bit of goods with this Liberty brand. Shall I put you down for a carton to come with this other order? Thank you. Please sign on the dotted line—that's it. I'm obliged. Good day!" And Duker proceeds on his way with the Liberty Bond—er, Brand!

"My trip last week," remarked Ph. Wilkinson, "was out the Susquehanna. Only two trains daily are operated on the main line from Albany to Binghamton. So you can readily see why, with ten minutes in a town, I couldn't very well call upon seven customers.

"But," went on Phil, "in two or three weeks more I'll have the little limousine on the highway, bounding o'er stone and stumble, frost kinks, detours, and the many other Spring-like attractions of the commercial motorist, a la Bennett, Sloan & Co.

"Nevertheless, I can make practically everything on the list with the car, and I hope to recover lots of the ground I've lost by this terrible winter. Why, over in Massachusetts the other day, I was in a dealer's place when he sent a boy for a bag of coal. Just one single bag is all the dealer could get each day, and frequently not that. And, on this occasion, the boy returned without the blackburn, saying he couldn't wait in line with the crowd because he'd be late for school. Then, when the merchant did get the coal, he paid $1 for a hundred pounds, including the go-and-get-it charge."

On Church street, Albany, at the tobacco factory of Shields & Son, the famous one-ounce foil Cavendish chewing is now manufactured in a pasted stamp package instead of the former Government printed foil-stamped, so long on the market with the little red tab.

At the Green street shops of H. Heck & Son, Albany, the cigar factory work is gradually being turned over to the son, as Henry Heck is concentrating his business interests.

Two Green street drug-cigar men are changing business plans in Albany. On the corner of Green and Hudson avenue, John J. Knauf is disposing of his entire stock at auction. While a few blocks below, at Green and Madison avenue, F. T. Heyman has recently purchased the old established stand of Dr. E. C. Brumaghim, who died a few weeks ago.

All the Liggett drug stores in the Capitol District are featuring their own private brand, Black and White. Very attractive displays in the Albany, Troy and Schenectady locations are made on the Black and White in cigars, cigarettes, small cigars and tobacco. This label readily lends itself to excellent display of a vivid contrast.

Quite a number of people go to Troy to get other things besides collars. For instance, Walter Branche goes to Troy to get orders for R-B cigars. That he has been there recently is evident in the window of Ryan & Sickles, 398 River street. There the entire display is composed of R-B specialties, and the boys inside shove 'em out, too.

Across the Square, at C. A. Hulett's upper River street store, all the available window front is given to Union Leader tobacco, in ten-cent tins. And, at the lower River street place, Zira cigarettes form a background for twelve bushels of pipes! Six of the big baskets are chuckful an' spillin' over with 23-cent pipes. While th' other half-dozen bushels are 33-cent goods. This enormous array sells lots of pipes to Troy smokers, you bet!

Comin' across th' Green Island bridge to Troy was a saxonette boilin' over with three large men, all a-puffin' like smokers of good segars! They made the half-turn at the end of the Bridge, all right, when the cop shoots up that semaphore fist of his'n. Quite naturally, everything stopped with a jerk, even the saxonette.

Cinders an' ashes! All three of the saxon-smokers were soon covered with them! Not from the cigars! No, no! These here coals from Newcastle were blown around an' into the saxophone an' th' occupants thereof by a wind which swept through Troy like Mercury!

For the aforementioned Green Island Bridge is the Great White Way to Troy's new ash-dump, across the river. So, in making the turn, it's the duty of the traffic cop to hold up all ordinary vehicles, includin' Dorf limousines and saxonettes, 'till th' ash-wagons catch th' cross-currents of the stiff river breeze.

Then down goes the Charing Cross copper's great right arm, an' on goes Fred Osborne an' party in th' Saxon, brushin' off th' hot coals from hats an' ulsters, meekly wonderin' if all Ash Wednesdays are like this!

"Because, if they are," gritted Fred, "I'll ask Mayor Burns to pass a few Osborne panetelas 'round to the boys on the carts so we'll be covered with ashes from our own stuff, just to act as antiseptic against all that refuse afloat on the Bridge!"

"But," objected the chauffeur, "you want to fix that cop first, Fred. If you don't, he'll hold us, Horatius-like, at the Bridge, till you send 'im a thousand perfectos!"

Bill bit th' tip o' his faber. He had started to write, "I will call on you on February 29th——" when he happened to think that wouldn't do for two years yet. And two years is entirely too long a time to defer a visit to the Capitol District!

So Bill Noonan decided to come right away!

EL ROI-TAN

OVER THE TOP

ROI-TAN goes "over the top" of the case faster than any other brand. Year after year ROI-TAN holds the world's championship for quality and popularity.

Live dealers feature ROI-TAN because it spells big volume and quick turnover. From the standpoint of both dealer and smoker ROI-TAN "THE PERFECT CIGAR" is the one best bet—now, tomorrow, always.

UP STATE SHOUTING

Which he did. Though, as an indication of his approach, he reinforced his postal advices with a parcel post package. Outside this parcel was plainly marked, in Bill's own chirography, "Please stack on end!" Inside was the reason.

For there, sittin' on a chair, was Tom Jefferson! Same person exactly who was third President of the Nation! Also, the very identical man who, with John Adams, urged the Declaration of Independence on July 4th, 1776! Then, fifty years later, to a day, on July 4th, 1826, both these President-Signers passed away!

But, the coincidence now is that Bill Noonan sends this big window-frame cut-out to the trade from 1214 Filbert street, Philadelphia, the very town where the deed was done, an' th' bell was rung!

Though, to be sure, Tom Jefferson didn't realize, at the moment, bein' so occupied with th' details of th' plot, parchment, quill pens, inkpots, etc., that the Cameron Tobacco Co. would name such a good mixture of tobacco after his name and fame!

Probably, too, Tom Jefferson didn't stop to think, just then, amidst all the clatter of spearminting stenogirls, dictagraphs, mimeographs, and Remington-writers, that he'd live fifty years more, so he'd eventually get his name on Bill Noonan's brand! For, at that time, if our friends, the English, coulda landed on Tom, his 33d year woulda been his last, an' Jefferson Mixture now'd be Noonan's Best!

"It has occurred to me," remarked Robert H. Fischel, president of the Fischel Paper Co., Albany, "that pipe and smoking tobacco manufacturers don't take advantage of a possible advertising argument.

"Now, here's my own case," he continued, "where I've been smoking for years both cigars and pipe. When I buy cigars, or even cigarettes, I don't consider it extravagant to spend, say, fifty cents to a dollar per day for the enjoyment I obtain.

"Neither does the average smoker, even if he happens to spend more or less on his smoking, think twice about the cost of the material, unless it be a pipe or smoking tobacco.

"Here, however, the pipe smoker, except he be a rather rare example of pipe-bug, will usually hem and haw over a $5 pipe and a smoking tobacco which costs either $2 or $3 the pound.

"But figure it out. In the possession of a guaranteed brier of superior quality the smoker has a gem which nearly lasts forever. On the other hand, if he buys the customary cheap pipe he is in continual hot water. For those flashy bargain pipes, selling for less than one or two dollars, are a perpetual bother with their accompanying defects, coming to the surface with each recurring smoke.

"Same, also, with cheap tobacco. There is no satisfaction in smoking a grade of goods which tastes rank, smells bad, and is rotten! Why, the most costly pipe tobacco on the market, giving keen pleasure—even joy to the ladies in the house, who invariably complain about rank flavored material—even this excellent tobacco costs only ten to twenty cents the day, allowing for lots of smoke! And this comparative argument for good goods I've never seen in print!"

"Soon I'll have my Chevrolet on the job. Then this hiking stunt will be taboo." So saying, M. A. Schufeldt rolled his pants up 'nother notch, preparatory to a wade into the slush an' muck of the Capitol District streets. "Yes, the auto game has got this walking idea stopped. Over in Schenectady, Mr. Killeen now operates some $25,000 in various cars. And he ordered another one a while ago over the phone, just like a box of Bolds to be delivered to a smoker!"

Up there in Corinth, back o' Saratoga, they make a pile of pulp into fairly good news paper. But now they're goin' to start a little sumthin' on th' side! And this'll make Mizzouri kick lik' a Washington mule, even though th' houn' dawg doesn't holler!

For D. Davignon, twenty years a tobacconist, and owner of several vichy spring farms, is goin' to plant corn this season! Then, next Fall, when th' frost is on th' pnnkin', Brother D. D. figgers he'll market the cobs, an' so increase his income tax nex' year!

"Much of my work is among the tobacconists, both wholesale and retail," said Dan Long, "and I'd just like to say our trucking and storage firm has been reorganized. It will still be known as the Albany Trucking & Storage Co. But Mr. Simpson will withdraw, and the new owners are D. E. Long & Sons. We'll continue the very same service and methods, moving or storing anything, from the State Capitol building to a case of cigars. I'll fight the thing out Over Here 'till my two boys finish the job Over There. Then, upon their return from the war, we'll settle the details at 21 Hudson avenue."

"Did you ever see anything, in all your life, die so fast as the trade for imported and domestic clear Havana cigars?" asked Manager Drummond, of the Albany United Stores. "Why, since last Fall, the business on this class of goods, especially the Cuban, is practically nothing. And they require more attention, as to condition, moisture, colors and so on, with less profit than the more attractive Porto Rican and Manila cigars.

"In the United Shield, our organization paper," went on Drummond, "Expert Peterson, who looks after the conditioning of goods, tells how the various grades of cigars should be kept in wholesale and retail stock.

"He advises, where convenient, even the separate compartment in retail show cases for the individual classes of leaf represented in the subdivisions of brands. For instance, Porto Rican and Manila appear to require considerably more moisture than Havana or domestic cigars. So Petersen recommends partitioned-off sections in display cases for these goods. This prevents each line of merchandise from absorbing the distinctive flavor and bouquet of any other nearby type. And it seems to be an excellent id though rather difficult, in the average ret store of limited space, of devoting any specifi sections to a permanent position. Though tl might be overcome, of course, by using moval partitions, adjustable to stock increases and c creases."

"Yes, it's rather difficult to obtain goods ju now. Brands in demand are scarce. But bu ness is a trifle slow, anyway. So I suppose we get along all right 'till the betterment com with early Springtime, surely not far away."

"Up in th' mawnin' at half-past five,
Feelin' a darn sight mor' dead than alive;
An' now I'm goin' to my happy home,
With nawthin' left but skin an' bone!"

Now if you don't believe all this song-stu jess look at Boss Draudt! Why, he hard weighs so much as a weekly report—nawthi mor' than a shadder of his former portly form bein' reduced f'om 149 to verra, verra clos' a mere gross o'pounds, avoirdupois!

And all this came about, too, through getti up in th' dew at 5:30 A.B., which Draudt say is no business college degree, but simply befo breakoday-an'-breakfast!

Not that Draudt is practicin' for war! N he's merely tryin' to boss th' gang of Luck Strike boys by bein' on th' job all th' while To do this correctly, Draudt gets up earl makes train connections from Ogdensburgh t metropolitan centers like Boonville, Carthag an' similar great towns in York State!

But lissen a-minnit, an' he'll tell you all abou it: "North of Utica last week I ran into bunch of poor train connections. So I had t arise at the wish of the time-table. Fact is, sat up all night in a long run back to Alban in order to arrive in season for my krumble and postum. Then I jumped the West Shor for a look-in at Kingston. And here I am bac in Albany again with the key of the Stuyvesan Hotel in my pocket, and due in Kingston onc more tonight!

"Moving 'round like that, though, gives m a hump on the job," continued Draudt, "and can look after A. T. Co. business from th Canadian line to the Hudson River territory b hustlin' a bit now and then. During January I put four men to work in the crew. Tw other vacancies are open. I've got eight appli cations in my grip for the jobs, but I think it' good policy to put on married men above th draft age only just now. Salesman Countryma is doing very well indeed with the Lucky Strik game. Tyndall is also a new man. Griffin ha resigned, having gone with Van Slyke & Hor ton. So I guess I've got plenty to do breakin in green men and looking after the Lucky Strik cigaret development right here in the Capita District."

Writing from his Gloversville office jobbe W. F. Orr says: "I'm sold out of Eccentri cigars. None are in sight. And I'm four t six weeks behind back orders. Anticipate you business on this brand as much as possible, an I'll thank you very much indeed."—The Smoker

GARCIA GRANDE'S undeniable mildness is associated with the distinctive quality of Vuelta Abajo tobacco.

When we originated the Garcia Grande, we gave the world a real mild Havana, a large cigar, a good cigar that could be sold for a moderate price. The Garcia Grande represents the triumph of a new idea.

The Garcia Grande has attained a national distribution, not through extensive advertising, but strictly on its merits. It has developed continually increasing sales in all parts of the country. The fact that it appeals to everyone who likes a mild Havana, makes the Garcia Grande a brand that both the jobber and retailer may depend on for steady business.

Protecting the Situation

A Plan to Make Credit a Little Less Cheap

(Copyright, 1918, by Elton J. Buckley.)

A few weeks ago a certain jobber sold a large retailer about $2,000 worth of goods. The two had had business relations for several years and the retailer had always been slow, but eventually had always paid. When the jobber booked and shipped the $2,000 order, he had no reason to believe that his customer's financial status was in any way changed from what it had been when he first started to do business with him.

Two weeks after the receipt of the $2,000 worth of goods by the retailer, he went into bankruptcy. It was a very bad failure, and it doesn't seem possible for creditors to get over 10 or 15 per cent. This bankruptcy so closely followed the receipt of these goods by the buyer, that if the jobber had properly protected himself, he could have stepped in and seized the entire $2,000 worth, or such part as had not been disposed of. This is under a familiar and highly protective rule of law which is thus stated in a recent case in the United States Court:

If one who at the time is insolvent, or in failing circumstances, obtains goods from another on credit, with no intention of paying for them, or at least with no reasonable expectation of paying for them, and the sale was induced by false and fraudulent representations as to his financial condition, on which the seller relied, or if the sale would not have been made but for his fraudulent concealment of his financial condition, or of the fact that he did not intend to pay, or reasonably expect to be able to pay, for the goods, the seller has the right to rescind the sale and recover his property.

In other words, he doesn't have to give the goods up to the trustee in bankruptcy, or whoever the official may be, and take the pitiful dividend which after many months may be declared, but he can seize his goods and take them back, and thus, in effect, get 100 per cent. of his claim.

The trouble is that sellers of merchandise, when it turns out that a customer who owes a bill is bankrupt, are not usually in a position to avail themselves of this remedy.

It can be put down as usually certain that any representations made by a buyer of merchandise, for the purpose of obtaining credit, a few days, or even weeks, before he fails, are untrue, which means that every seller who has sold him goods within that priod, can, if he has properly protected the situation, step in and seize his goods and thus save a loss.

What do I mean by properly protecting the situation? Every buyer of merchandise on credit, whether wholesale or retail, whose purchases are likely to run into a substantial sum, should be compelled at the beginning to sign a written statement of assets and liabilities. That is of course very often done, especially in the jobbing business, but the written statement often fails to include really protective items. The strength of a financial statement is usually in the warranties which are set forth in the preamble. Following is an outline of a good preamble to a financial statement:

Paragraph 1.—An averment that this is a correct statement of assets and liabilities, made for the purpose of obtaining credit.

Paragraph 2.—An averment that certain other conditions, covenants and agreements which appear below, are also made for the purpose of obtaining credit. These are:

a.—That bills will be paid on certain named terms, unless the customer becomes bankrupt, in which case all bills shall become immediately due.

b.—An agreement in case the seller has to collect unpaid bills by legal process or through an attorney, that the buyer shall pay all expenses.

c.—An averment that all of the assets shown on the statement are the property of the customer and are held by him in his own name, that he has not pledged same or encumbered same or put a chattel mortgage on same. Also an agreement to give the seller five days' notice of any intent to encumber his assets in any way.

d.—An agreement to give the seller immediate notice of any change in his financial status which reduces the net worth shown in the statement.

e.—An admission that the buyer has read and understood everything in the statement.

The buyer who signs this will be tightly bound by it if it is not true. The difficulty is that it may be true at the time it was given, but become untrue by reason of deterioration in the customer's affairs, of which he carelessly or intentionaly fails to give his creditor notice. In such case, if the seller has just gone on accepting orders from the buyer in the belief that the financial statement is still true, there having

SING A SONG OF SIX CENTS IN CHICAGO

Some Dealers Perhaps Do Not Impress Their Customers Sufficiently Concerning Changed Conditions—Buyers Keep on Asking for Nickel Goods—Business Isn't So Fine as It Could Be—But the World Wags on and the Cigar Trade Gets a Moiety of the Money in Circulation

CHICAGO, Ill., March 1.—While business is not good, it could be worse, so everybody is knocking wood, and hoping for an improvement soon. The weather has been adverse to retail business. Several rainy days squelched sales considerably. Work in Chicago cigar factories is slack; in fact, most of them have not worked this year, having carried over a large surplus stock from last year; 6-cent cigars don't seem to make much headway and it is reported that several New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore factories shortly will put out smaller sizes of their now 6-cent brands to retail at 5 cents.

Havana Blend, a 5-cent cigar made by Labinsky Brothers and Kleiner, is featured by Shoemakers & Co.

The Congress Cigar Co. is one of the fortunate factories. Workers there are as busy as bees turning out La Palina cigars. The additional floor they opened last month is now filled with cigar makers but they still are not able to get all orders filled. La Palina is a Java wrapped all Havana filled cigar that has come to the front very rapidly the past two years.

Dolan's Segar Shop is showing Cuesta Rey, Romeo Garcia, Square Guy and El Roi Tan cigars. Of late the pipe department has shown a lot of life and Dolan is disposing of many high-priced briar and meerchaums.

The P. Lorillard Co. is placing the new "Windsor Castle" cigarettes. The package is very nifty, being brought out in white, red and gold. 4 and 20 smokes are packed in each package, which retails for 20 cents. The Sherman Hotel store of Breitung's has already worked up a big trade for this newcomer. Walter Berger has charge of "Windsor Castle Fags" in this market.

The sympathy of the trade is extended to Harry Gray, manager of the Borland building cigar store, whose father passed away last week.

Eddie Hoellen, of the Breitung sales force, has been drafted and is now in training at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill. Ed. took plenty of smokes with him so he would not be lonesome.

Harry Rinaldo, "he sails from Frisco" and sells for F. Garcia & Brothers of Tampa, arrived to spend a few weeks, helping his distributers Ruhstrat, Cowley & Co. F. Garcia has a good local sale, and Harry will devote much time to this market from now on. This is Rinaldo's first trip here for work and he has already spotted the "bright lights" and is meeting with much success.

The executive committee of the Chicago Retail Cigar Dealers' Association held a special meeting February 23. R. Mason Lewis, who held office temporarily as secretary, resigned, having been drafted for the Army. John H. Weber, the present acting treasurer, was elected to fill the office of secretary also. A committee composed of Harry Kantor and Harris L. Harris, has arranged a deal with the Chicago Morning Telegraph, a weekly paper, whereby they are to receive full pages of publicity pertaining to the Chicago Retail Cigar Dealers' Association and news items of the local trade's doing. The Chicago Morning Telegraph is edited by Jack Lait and Thos. Bourke. The paper will reach practically every dealer in Chicago. A trade organizer will be engaged by the association to bring in new members, and a strong spring campaign will shortly be launched to make the Chicago association one of the strongest in the United States.

Ben Lesser, the "Old Reliable," is again with us, booking orders for his firm, the Havana Products Co., of New York and Key West.

Beacon Hill Mixture of C. B. Perkins & Co., Boston, is carried here by several of the high class stores. The eight-ounce tin being in much demand.

Walter Tobin, of Walter Tobin & Co., is laid up, sick, because of overwork. Business with this firm is bigger than ever.

A boy in short trousers and said to be in his teens, is being sought by the police, charged with having stolen a box of cigarettes valued at $75, from a wagon of the Western Express Co.

War has made the landlords do away with May 1 as moving day. The storage companies cannot handle more than 25 per cent of their normal business. Well, if you can't move—you must pay rent. What an awful war?

E. G. Wallace & Co. are the owners of a busy cigar stand in the lobby of the National Life Building, at 29 South La Salle street. Their main place is located in the Stock Exchange Building.

"O. P. M.," our private mixture of Cobb, Bates & Yerxa Co., of Boston, can now be purchased in Chicago. Walter Tobin & Co. are the agents.

The lobby of the Ashland block, in Shoemaker & Co.'s window, shows a pippin of an Omar display.

The popular restaurant of Louis Deutsch & Co., at 185 N. Clark street, does quite a business on the Lozano brand.

Al Johnson has changed his mind again. Instead of joining the Schinasi sales force he has signed up with the Mendelsohn Co., of Cleveland, and will push Paramount brand of cigars. Watch Al's smoke.

Heineman Bros., of Baltimore, have placed a new 6-cent brand with the cigar department of Franklin MacVeagh & Co., under the title "258," this being the first number drawn in the draft. It goes to the retailer for $43 per thousand. Ernest Jacoby, the factory representative, closed this important deal.

The Illinois Athletic Club, a few days ago, held its eleventh annual birthday party and carnival. Crowds were tremendous and several well known cigar men took part. Ernest McKenzie held forth at the "dice" table on the "days of 49" floor, while Geo. Stocking "Tuval Geo." pranced around the Japanese Garden on the main floor showing Geisha girls all the latest steps. Your correspondent was arrested for winning too many prizes and was find $500 by Judge La Buy, but on payment of the fine (stage money) was released. The Illinois Athletic Club is the largest club of its kind east of New York.

I. R. Cohn, 50 West Lake street, has added several of Schulte's brands to his stock. In the window displays are seen Bellefair, El Morello, Schulte's Invencibles, and La Luz brands.

Now comes along Wm. White, who says that "many patriots think the only way they can give their lives to their country is either by dying of old age or joining the Home Guards."

Walter Tobin & Co. have added the Carmona brand of mild selected Havanas made by Simon Batt & Co. They are carried in 10 sizes. Frank Rian wears a big smile, as he closed the deal for the factory and they are surely repeating with Tobin's high class trade.

Call up Park & Tilford and tell Irving Studwell to send Ramon Dobler back here in a hurry, for there are several fine orders waiti for him.

Fred Oakes has returned from his Easte trip. He says the mosquitoes are frozen and it doesn't seem like home any more. Bu ness was big, for Fred and the E. H. Gato Cig Co. received several handsome orders wh he was out on the trip.

Ed. Kirsch, in the Schiller Building, is sho ing several sizes of Robert Bacon and Flor Bustillo cigars in his case. Corina of Jc Escalante & Co., Tampa, is also a big sell with his trade.

Star Plug tobacco has gone up in price. now comes seven cuts to a plug.

Here's the unusual—praise from New Yo for Chicago: "Certainly a wonderful city Governor Charles S. Whitman of New Yo said on his recent visit here. "I mean it si cerely, Chicago is the most representative ci of America. I mean one of the most."

George Stocking has been "Tuvaling" arou town. Business on the several Marcelino Per & Co. brands in Chicago is increasing all t time. George is one of those "real" salesm and has a big following in the local field.

Cubador blunts are selling well with the jo bing house of E. Hoffman & Co.; they ret for 5 cents.

Sunday Specials, a union label 5-cent ciga made in Pennsylvania, is jobbed here by Tho wart & Roehling Co.

The G & E Crown, made for Grommes Elson, is being placed with the southside trad The brand is made by Haas Brothers of Ci cinnati, and the cigars sell for 5 cents eac being packed 100 in a box.

Jos. Beck, 537 East 47th street, is buildin up a nice trade on Press Club cigars, made Randall & Landfield of Chicago and Bento Harbor, Mich. Romeo-Garcia opera size also a good seller with Beck.

Rosadora, from the factory of A. S. Vale tine & Son, Philadelphia, is sold in a great man places; Ruhstrat Cowley Co. are the local di tributers.

C. I. Case has placed with Albert Breitung 10 for 35 cents finished little cigar in package that are made in Tampa. It will be made unde Breitung's private label "Puritan Girl." Th opening shipment will arrive shortly.

Wm. Wolfson returned from a trip to S Louis last week. He has dispatched H. D. Roth of his Chicago sales force, to St. Paul an Minneapolis to boost Pall Mall cigarettes.

All Schulte's windows are showing big di plays of Little Lovera cigars. They still reta for 25 cents the package.

Royal Bengals and Hoffman House now cos the retail dealers $15.70 per thousand. The retail for 18 cents.

Albert Breitung has become Chicago distrib uter of the Continental, a 3 for 25 cents ciga made by the Graham-Ernst Cigar Co.

Adele Rowland, the actress, who appeared a the Palace Music Hall last week, gave a tobacc tea on the stage to the public after each per formance. The only requirement being tha each person who accepted gave a package o tobacco or cigarettes, to be sent to the soldier and sailors. Hearing of the plan, Miss Luc Page Gaston, superintendent of the Anti-Ci garette League of America, called on Mis Rowland and expressed regret that one of th country's leading vaudeville actresses shoul sanction the use of cigarettes. Miss Rowlan has already forwarded several cases of smoke to the boys and will keep up the work in all th cities she will visit. H. L. H.

A German report, dated January 14, is to th effect that the Dresden Chamber of Commerc has considered substitutes for tobacco an recommended lime tree leaves, also those o pear trees, apple trees, walnut, hazel, chestnu and beech. These would, it is pointed out, in crease the supplies and lower the prices.

Busy Cigar Departments in Big St. Louis Stores

Extensive Advertising Makes Many Sales on Saturday—Newly Organized Union Soon Causes a Strike—A Grocer May Pay Rather Dear for Stolen Tobacco That He Bought—George Pennoyer a Leading Tobacconist of Hannibal, Mo., Passes Away.

St. Louis, Mo., March 2.—Probably the most effective advertising now being carried on in daily newspapers by retailers in St. Louis is that of the two big department stores which have cigar shops—the Stix, Baer & Fuller Dry Goods Co. (Grand-Leader), and Scruggs, Vandervoort & Barney Dry Goods Co. The Grand Leader's cigar department, which occupies a commanding position on the main floor in the men's clothing and furnishing goods department, has been in operation for the last four or five months, and under the management of Charles Schreck, formerly of the Tobacco Products Corporation, has been successful. The department at Scruggs is about two years old, and is under the management of Charles Schreiber, under whose direction there has been a marked increase in sales. The department has a very favorable location, especially in view of the fact that it is at the entrance to the big Syndicate Trust building, and is the only cigar store in the building.

Saturday is the day these department stores appeal to smokers, and a liberal amount of space is used in the morning and afternoon papers to induce men to stock up for Sunday and for the week. One of the most unusual methods employed is to advertise men's wear right with the cigars. Recently under the same heading advertising men's first showing of spring hats, the two stores named called attention to some cigar "specials."

"What to smoke and why," was the title of a recent Grand-Leader ad. It gave this argument before stating prices: "There is a reason for every one of the cigars in our cigar shop—why men will like them. First of all, they are fresh, kept in humidors and in prime condition. They are the best known brands, and they are sold at prices that are making scores of friends every day for the cigar shop." Convincing arguments, aren't they?

As a result of these advertisements, Saturday is a big day in both stores. They have found that advertising does pay.

Several hundred workers, practically all twistmakers, are now on strike at the Liggett & Myers Tobacco factory, following the formation of a union at a mass-meeting held at New Club Hall, Thirteenth street and Chouteau avenue, last Wednesday afternoon. A. McAndrews, president of the Tobacco Workers' International Union, with headquarters at Louisville, said that the organization was a measure of protection. These officers were elected: President, James Hilton; vice-president, David Clifford; recording secretary, Charles Schneider; financial secretary, George Balz, and guard, Silas Craig. The question of wages is involved in the strike of the twistmakers. These strikers were joined by some girl wrappers, stemmers, pickers and rackers, who voted to ignore request of the company to return and finis a lot of tobacco that they had started on th previous day.

Some of the clerks in the five big depart ment stores refused to return to work Tues day morning after the employers had decline or failed to recognize the union after a few hours' notice. A readjustment of the wag scale was to follow the recognition of th union. Most of the strikers are young girls and clothing salesmen. Only a very smal majority of the clerks are out, and the strikers' ranks have been daily thinning out Business is about normal in the stores.

There is such a thing as cheap tobacco Witness the statement of a St. Louis grocer who says that he has been buying tobacco for 35 cents a pound from employes of Liggett & Myers' plant since last July. But Liggett & Myers got even less than that for it; in fact, they got nothing. The tobacco was stolen. Two employes and the grocer have been arrested. One packer confessed to stealing the tobacco, declaring that he took it from the factory in his shirt bosom and sold it.

Word has been received in St. Louis of the death this week at Hannibal, Mo., of George Pennoyer, proprietor of the Stag, the leading cigar store of that hustling Mississippi River town. He was well known to traveling men and to the trade generally in St. Louis.

Basil Condax was in St. Louis the last week pushing the sale of Condax cigarettes.

Good progress has been made on the new cigarette factory of the American Tobacco Co. at Reidsville, N. C. The walls are now up to the fifth or last floor. Work on the roof will begin in a few days.

MOTOR TRUCK PARCELS POST ROUTES.

Instead of loading parcels on a truck, transferring them to a train, and loading them on another truck at their destination, the postoffice authorities are preparing to let the truck do the whole business and save two transfers, in a considerable number of instances. Altogether, several thousand miles of truck-routes are to be established by the Postoffice Department in the near future. That this plan may be extended to the whole local postal service is suggested by the writer of an article in The Commercial Vehicle. The new method will play an important part in lowering the price of food products by facilitating their distribution. It is said:

"The installation of motor-truck parcel-post routes in various sections of the country, aggregating between 3,000 and 4,000 miles, is the ambitious plan of the Postoffice Department. It is expected these routes will be in operation within the next three months. One main of truck-routes will extend from Portland, Me., to New Orleans, La. Another will over much of a large stretch of territory in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and West Virginia. In the Pacific Coast routes will be established between San Francisco and Sacramento, via Stockton and Fruitdale, a distance of 125 miles, and between Redlands and Los Angeles, via Ontario and Pomona, Cal., a distance of seventy-six miles.

"With the Government, State, and local authorities today working in harmony with individuals, motor organizations, railroad heads, and others to the end that the present congestion of freight be removed, and that the future be as free as possible from situations such as exist today, the action taken by the Postoffice Department looking to radical extension of motor parcel post routes is of vast interest, not alone to the motor truck industry, but also to the general public.

"Recognition by every branch of the Government up to this time of the utility and value of the motor truck means, undoubtedly, that the production of such vehicles is to have Federal Government encouragement, instead of discouragement. The new postoffice plans, in detail, look to the ultimate motorization of the entire postal service, with the exception of some of the cross-country trains, both local and general. At present authority from Congress will have to be awaited by the Department before it can carry out all the program which it is considering in this connection.

"As an indication of the efficiency of the present truck mail service in one of the cities where it was in operation during one year, the motor trucks engaged in the transportation of mail between the depot and the postoffice were scheduled to make 384,526 trips, and there were only 132 failures, or one failure to every 2,913 trips."

been no new representations made, it is almost impossible to seize the goods, if the customer becomes bankrupt, because he can plead that he made no false representations, or any representations at all, about his finances immediately prior to that particular sale. The thing to do, therefore, is to make the customer reiterate the representation contained in the financial statement every time he gives an order. This is much simpler than it sounds. You need only print the following on your order blanks:

> As an inducement to this order, the undersigned expressly reiterates and warrants the representations as to financial status contained in the last financial statement given John Jones & Co. (the seller to whom the order is being given.)

If a buyer signs an order with this in it, he is bound by it whether he saw it or not, and if he goes bankrupt while the goods covered by the order are in his possession, the seller can seize them, because he will have made explicit representations about his finances as an inducement to that very order.

There are some cases in which the seller can seize the goods even without false representations made as an inducement to the sale. These are cases where the buyer's financial conditions proved to be so rotten that his silence about it, when he bought, was in itself a fraud. It is only occasionally, however, that this is true, and it is a great deal better to have the protection I have outlined above.

Reports from Vuelta Abajo Are Discouraging

Vegueros Going to Work in Remedios Districts

HAVANA, March 1.—People here are clamoring for flour. A bread shortage is reported. Meat is scarce, and lard is also almost impossible to get. Condensed milk apparently arrives in fair quantities from the United States, but here in Havana we have scant supplies. Prices of all necessaries of life are sky high. Even Cuban products have gone up, out of all proportion, except sugar, which has been controlled by the American Government, and is relatively the cheapest product of our soil.

Crop news from Remedios and Partido continues to be favorable but owing to the drought no improvement is reported in the Vuelta Abajo region. Spring has come and there is hardly any chance of a betterment in the Vuelta. The exodus of the poor vegueros to Santa Clara province, continues upon a larger scale than ever.

Business on leaf market has been restricted principally to local manufacturers, who are picking up any desirable vegas of Vuelta Abajo, which may still be had, at fancy figures.

Exports of cigars per S. S. Mexico, February 16, 1918, totalled 677 cases, containing 3,026,512 cigars, and which were consigned to the following countries, viz.: To United States, 1,260,940; to Great Britain, 1,082,320; to Australia, 179,500; to British Africa, 147,500; to Canada, 128,700; to Argentine, 115,252; to Uruguay, 59,500; to France, 21,000; to New Zealand, 10,000; to Greece, 10,000; to the Bahamas (Nassau), 5,500; to the British East Indies, 4,500; and to the French West Indies (Martinique), 1,800.

Exports of leaf tobacco from Havana, for the week ending February 18, 1918, totalled 10,040 bales, which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: To all ports of the United States, 7,879; to Canada, 167; to Great Britain, 240; to Argentine, 1,429; to Uruguay, 275; and to Chile, 50 bales.

Among the leaf buyers who arrived this week were: Fred Hirschhorn, President of the General Cigar Co., and S. Ruppin, of S. Ruppin, Inc., both from New York, and both accompanied by their wives. Godfrey S. Mahn, of Philadelphia, paid a visit to our cigar manufacturers this week.

Antonio Gutierrez, buyer for the Gene-Val Cigar Company, returned to New York after making purchases of leaf for the factory.

Romeo y Julieta is striking a balance for the year ending February 28, and while the company sold more cigars than in 1917, the profit may not be so big. Romeo y Julieta is, however, as busy as ever.

Partagas also complains that while sales exceeded the previous year, the net result has been less favorable. Nevertheless the factory is increasing its output.

Punch prefers to do a smaller business a profit than to execute more orders, b without any corresponding gain. Punch h good orders.

La Corona, Henry Clay and La Flor de S. Murias, Hoyo de Monterrey, Eden (Ca ixto Lopez & Co.), Por Larranaga, Belind and Ramon Allones, all are working on goo order slates. The rest of the factories repo trade rather dull at present. ROSAM.

The Tobacco Association of the United State is not "asleep at the switch." The officers c the association and the various committees ar at work on matters of vital importance to th trade. A vigorous campaign will soon be mad for new members, and it is a good time for u to suggest that every tobaccoman who can pos sibly do so ought to join the association. What ever is good for the trade as a whole is good fo every man or firm engaged in the tobacco trade There was a meeting of the board of governor held recently in Richmond, when matters o great importance were discussed, and some o the more momentous were acted upon. Th time and place for holding the next annua meeting has not yet been decided upon, but wil be in a short time. We believe that the meetin will be held at Atlantic City some time in June although organizations in New York City ar urging that the meeting be held in that city —Southern Tobacco Journal.

Secretary Lansing at a luncheon talked about the German corruption funds, says the Detroit Free Press. "Germany gave over ten million marks to Bolo," he said. "She gave over five million to Lenoir. She handed to Count Bernstorff for his various propaganda at least one hundred millions. This proves to us that there are lots of easy marks in Germany."

Kalgan, a gate in the great wall of China, 125 miles northwest of Peking, is the present chief entrepôt of Mongolian trade. The railway from Peking follows the old caravan route through Nankow Pass, where the grade is 3 feet in 100, across a great and fertile plain dotted with walled cities, up into the Mongolian hills to Kalgan, where it turns westward into Shansi Province. Kalgan Pass is about 2 miles north of the railway station. Through this pass comes a never-ceasing procession of camels, horses, and carts of all kinds, bringing Mongolian commodities to the railhead. There are few more interesting sights in the world than the traffic through Kalgan Pass. In this picturesque old Mongolian city of 60,000 inhabitants, the British American Tobacco Co. has established a depot, of growing importance for the distribution of cigarettes and smoking tobacco.

Cigar-making, paper manufacturing, and the steel mills were the only industries out of thirteen in the United States, investigated by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which employed more persons in January, 1918, than in the same month last year. The increase was 4.9 per cent. in cigar factories, three-tenths of 1 per cent. in paper mills, and 2 per cent. in iron and steel. Automobile plants showed the greatest decrease in workers, 10.4 per cent.; silk, 9.8; boots and shoes, 9.2, and leather, 8.9. Nine industries had a greater payroll in January than in the same month of 1917, the greatest increase being 18.3 per cent. in woolen manufacturing, in which there was a decrease of two-tenths of 1 per cent. in the number employed. The pay-roll of cotton factories increased 17.4 per cent., as compared with 1.8 per cent. decline in the number of workers. Boots and shoes, automobile manufacturing, and leather manufacturing showed the only decreases in total pay-rolls, the greatest being 11.9 per cent. in the last named.

Listen to Tom X. Jones

"Hello, Minneapolis, Tom Jones of Mankato, Minn., is on the wire."

"What's that? Mustn't call a man by his nickname. I know that. But this man's name isn't Thomas Jones. No one would know him by that cognomen. Besides, his parents didn't name him Thomas. They knew he would be called Tom, if they did, and so they named him Tom, throwing in an 'X' for a middle initial. What does X stand for? How do I know? I am not a census taker or a revenue officer trying to get his income tax. All I know is his name is Tom X. Jones, that he runs a nifty cigar store, is a director of the Northwestern Cigar and Tobacco Association, a good fellow as all fellows are who are wider than they are high, and besides I know he is a merchant who has ideas. Just hear him, if you don't believe it:

" 'I am going to sell my goods at a price which will yield me a profit, and I don't care a whit what any other man sells for. There's a druggist round the corner from my store who, I understand, sells cigarets on a license which a cigaret manufacturer's agent bought for him, and as a result he sells their cigarets at the price they want them sold at. The price isn't my price, for it does not yield a profit of more than 20 per cent, if it does that much. I told my customers what my goods cost, and they just keep on buying from me, although they could run down to the drug store and save money. But the boys are of a class who believe that a cigar merchant is entitled to a profit as well as any one else. So I should worry.' "

Last fall Jones worked out a price list, submitted it to other cigar dealers in Mankato, all of whom approved it, but that is the last that was heard of it, except that it is in force in the Jones store. And there isn't any odd cent in it, so far as cigarets go. Packages which are selling in St. Paul and Minneapolis, "the cities," as they call us down there, at 13 and 18 cents, are selling at Jones' at 15 and 20 cents, although two packages are given for 25 and 35 cents respectively. This fact brought out the information that Jones is not a believer in the odd price. Here is what he says on that score:

"Cigars have always been built to fit the coin —5 cents, 10 cents, 15 cents, and so on. And it appears to me this fact is going to be hard to get away from. If we had a six-cent coin the situation would be easy. But to my notion unless the manufacturer makes his cigars fit the coin in the future as it has in the past, he will soon find that the cigar business is in the hands of druggists and others who conduct it as a side line.

"Eastern manufacturers," he went on, "do not understand the west. Pennies have never been popular out here, and I don't believe they ever will be. Many of my customers refuse to accept them when handed out in change, saying they will leave them, and pay the balance on a second purchase. I, of course, am obliged to charge 6 cents for nickel cigars that have advanced over the $40 mark, but I hate to do it, and still have in my case two rows of cigars that sell at a nickel. But of course they can't be sold for that price much longer, and so unless the manufacturer cuts the size, I shall be forced to charge six cents, for every article I sell is going to give me a decent profit or I won't sell it."—Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

A visitor from Europe now in New York declares that American soldiers are teaching the men of Europe to chew gum. The demand for this cud favored by human beings has increased so rapidly that one American factory in England cannot supply it. This is one of the most hopeful bits of news from the front. The new habit will tone up the morale of the men and increase their determination to win—develop their powers of jaw-setting. But our hint would be that the habit be extended beyond the fighters. If we could get some of the talkers—premature peace advocates and the like—to devote their atention to gum-chewing, it might be worth a victory in the field. It might eve possible to make the gum for civilian use cessively sticky.—New York Sun.

WAR TORN CUBAN FLAG

Brght to Havana from France by Two Cubans Who Cae Home on Furlough After Going "Over the Top."

[AVANA, March 6.—Adolfo Trò and Anoio Lopez Rubio, the first two Cuban soldirs to go "over the top" in France, are now ortheir way to rejoin their comrades of the Foeign Legion from an Atlantic port, after naing brought, as a gift to President Menoa on their furlough here, a tattered Cuban dg, which was raised in "No Man's Land" a April 7, when Cuba declared war against ; many.

While the measures which the Cuban Govrment contemplates taking to send an acie fighting force to the French front are not ompleted, many Cubans, like these two roes, have volunteered in the French Forin Legion. Rubio and Tro left Havana September 23, 1914, to enlist in the French ary as volunteers. They were accompanied veight other Cubans, and all were incorporaid in the infantry of the Morocco division the French army. Tro and Rubio have aried themselves bravely during their three ars of service, Rubio having been wounded fo times and Tro three times.

The shrapnel-torn Cuban flag, which is a ozed souvenir of General Menocal in the Pesidential Palace, was hoisted by Tro and Rbio with two other Cubans, Privates Cirno and Crespo, who were attached to the sme division. The French military telepone had just brought to the sector where th Cubans were stationed the news of Cuba's dclaration of war against Germany, and the flg was hoisted on a small parapet amid the cheers of the French soldiers. Its appearance was saluted by the Germans with a shower of shrapnel which killed Ciruelo and Crespo. Their companions regained the flag, and Rubio and Tro were commissioned to bring it back and hand it to General Menocal.

"A Fine Meeting"

The Tobacco Salesmen's Association had an unusually interesting meeting, Friday evening. A number of new members were initiated. It was voted to send smileage books to members and sons of members in the United States service. It was decided to give an entertainment and dance at the Palm Garden on the evening of May 12. Regarding an aspersion of New York cigar stores as "gambling places," the association voted to send a "resolution of protest" to District Attorney Swann. The matter of having prominent men address the association on topics of general interest to the trade, was taken up and discussed and plans were made to "speed up" the progress of the Association.

Wisconsin Notes

EDGERTON, Wis., March 1.—The coming of spring-like days is facilitating the movements of the tobacco crop, both on the farms where stripping can now be completed, and in the improvement of the county highways, so that deliveries are becoming more plentiful. Wednesday was the largest receiving day of the season in this market, when hundreds of teams filled our streets. Owing to the inability to secure cars for transshipment, packers are experiencing a good deal of inconvenience in deliveries at outlying points, where temporary storage must be obtained until the car shortage is relieved. The farmers mostly have their crops ready and are anxious to make deliveries before their work on the farms commence, so the pressure to hurry along the receiving is becoming strong. The tobacco now coming to market is in fairly good condition, there being very much less complaint of high case or wet stems than earlier in the season.

Eastern railroad connections have not yet raised the embargo on carload shipments from storage, so the movement to factory points is limited.—Edgerton Reporter.

From an authoritative source it is learned that the smoker in Germany is experiencing more acute difficulties in getting his "rations." The tobacconists' shops in Berlin are now open for only four hours a day and cigar queues occur in all parts of the city. The "smokes" controller is down on hoarders, and the order is that only five cigars may be bought at a time, or 20 if they are to be sent to the front, in which case the retailer makes sure by despatching them to their destination.—London Tobacco.

The names of Herman Michaelson and Schumann & Co., of Santiago de Cuba, have been added to the "Enemy Trading List."

PAY ROLL STATISTICS

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Figures for the month of December, 1917, have been compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor for employment.

Fifty-seven cigar manufacturing establishments reported for the month of December, 1916, and December, 1917. In December, 1916, there were 19,451 persons employed in the 57 establishments, increasing in December, 1917, to 20,988 or an increase of 7.9 per cent. The payrolls in these same establishments increased from $231,335 in December, 1916, to $270,125 in December, 1917, or an increase of 16.8 per cent.

The same fifty-seven cigar manufacturers answered inquiries for the months of November and December, 1917. In these establishments there were employed in November, 1917, 20,978 increasing in December to 21,081 or an increase of .5 per cent. The payrolls decreased from $269,830 in November to $268,939 in December, 1917, or a decrease of .3 per cent.

AMERICAN BANK IN THE DUTCH EAST INDIES

Announcement is made that the International Banking Corporation of New York has opened a branch office for general banking business in Batavia. This institution has been doing business in Manila and Singapore for some years, but this is the first time that it or any other American concern has established direct connections with the Dutch possessions. Conditions arising from the war, such as the shutting off from the Dutch East Indies of sources of supply upon which they had previously relied for manufactured goods, the greatly increased demand in this country for tropical raw materials, and the establishment of Dutch trans-Pacific steamship lines giving reasonably direct connections between the Pacific coast of the United States and Batavia and Soerabaia, have tended greatly to increase the importance of our trade with these countries during the last year or two. The establishment of these banking connections represents, therefore, an important step forward in making these connections permanent.

The War Trade Board announces that the regulations requiring shippers, who propose exporting goods to their branches or agencies abroad, to execute and file with the Board a certain form of agreement, are suspended in the c of shipments consigned by individu firms, or corporations in the Un States to their branches or agen located in the United Kingdom, Fra the Dominion of Canada, Australia, N Zealand, or the Union of South Afr Before, or at the time of filing appl tions, exporters should execute and with the Board the prescribed form agreement.

TOBACCO CONSUMPTION IN FRANCE

C. W. A. Vedidtz, American commercial attache in Paris, reports that the recent increases in the price of tobacco in France were brought about practically without notice in order to prevent speculative operations and upon the assurances of the Minister of Finance that there would be a sufficient quantity of tobacco available. For some days, however, the newspapers have complained of a shortage of tobacco. The reasons for this shortage lie mainly in decreased domestic production, smaller imports, and largely increased consumption, for, contrary to the general impression, the use of chewing tobacco and of snuff has not diminished, and the price of cigars and cigarettes has not yet been advanced.

A rise in the price of tobacco has apparently never resulted in decreased consumption. In 1830 the per capita consumption was 352 grams (12.42 ounces); in 1845, 529 grams (18.66 ounces); in 1861, 763 grams (26.91 ounces); in 1875, 840 grams (29.63 ounces); in 1890, 944 grams (33.3 ounces; in 1915, 1,362 grams (48 ounces); and in 1916, 1,484 grams (52.34 ounces); yet each of these years was marked by an increase in price.

LANNIN'S NEW HOTEL MARNE

Joseph L. Lannin, who for over fifteen years was proprietor of the Garden City Hotel at Garden City, L. I., has filed plans for the erection of a new hotel in New York City to be built on the northwest corner of Seventh avenue and Fifty-sixth street, fronting 100 feet on the avenue and 200 feet on the street.

The new hotel will be Italian Renaissance in design, 270 feet in height, rising 22 stories above the street level, with a basement and sub-basement. The exterior will be of granite, limestone, brick and terra cotta; the interior construction will be of concrete.

The hotel will contain 920 guest rooms, of which 875 will be provided with private baths, and the remaining forty-five will have running water. In the basement will be a grill room 50 x 90 feet; on the ground floor will be a cafe 50 x 50 feet, the main dining room, 48 x 115 feet, the ball room 48 x 100 feet; on the mezzanine will be a lounge 40 x 90 feet; the library 30 x 40 feet, the ladies' room, etc. A roof garden will be provided.

The estimated cost of the building is $3,000,000 and work will be started as soon as possible. It is estimated that it will take about eighteen months to complete the construction. The plans for the new hotel have been drawn by Laurence L. Barnard.

The hotel will commemorate the battle of the Marne, and accordingly will be named the Hotel Marne. The hotel will be complete in every detail for the comfort and convenience of its guests. Mr. Lannin is a widely known hotel man, and was formerly owner of the Boston American league baseball team, at the time when that team held the world's championship.

In 1916 in New York City 154 apartment buildings were built, ranging from five to fourteen stories high, in which homes for about 22,000 people were provided. The buildings cost $23,000,000. In 1914, the year the war started and during which there were no building restrictions to curtail operations, 119 apartments were erected at a cost of $19,376,000.

AT THE TOP OF THE WORLD A WELL FILLED PIPE IS AN APPRECIATED COMFORT

"From Greenland's icy mountains," to ever frozen isles in the Arctic Ocean, wherever an Eskimo may go, he takes with him, if he possibly can, a supply of tobacco. In the gelid North, a well filled pipe verily is a comforter of man.

Etah is the settlement in Greenland nearest to the North Pole. Inhabitants of that village on the edge of the frigid wilderness all testify how highly tobacco is prized at the top of the world.

The seal hunter shown in the picture wouldn't exchange a pound of Tuxedo for a quart of diamonds. Good tobacco to him is the supreme luxury.

How American Industry Has Been Halted

Strikes Caused the Loss of 6,285,519 Production Days

BOSTON, March 12.—Increased cost of living and failure of employers in many cases to anticipate this influence has been one of the important contributory causes of recent strikes, according to the report issued today by the National Industrial Conference Board on strikes in American industries in war time.

From April 6 to October 6, 1917, there were strikes at 2,521 establishments the existence of which was definitely verified by the board. Each establishment was asked to report upon causes, but complete information was received from only 1,156. These plants showed 283,402 men idle and 6,285,519 days of production lost. Opinions were asked also of labor commissioners and mediators. Direct conference appeared to have been the most satisfactory method of settling these disputes.

NOW OR NEVER

"The hour is a dark and a black one, the obstacles cannot be overestimated, the danger cannot be sounded too insistently. It is now or never.

"It will not do for us one, two, three or four years from now to say then: 'We will now in this great struggle for democracy do differently.'

"It is won now and won for centuries or it is lost now and lost for centuries. Now is the accepted time. This is the day of salvation.

"For my part, the only fear that I have of America is the fact that we do not realize the imminent character of the peril, and moreover, the vital element of time. Time! Human endurance will not permit this war to go on endlessly. It will end in a compromise unless America shall sense the supreme peril of the hour and throw all of its supreme energies into the mighty task.

"It can do that. It will do it if it sees the peril. We are never lacking in courage, we are never lacking in idealism; but we do not see the vital nature of the present hour and it ought to be seen."—From the speech of James M. Beck.

Does the average man or woman who earns a substantial salary or good wages have any idea of the sacrifices made by the small investors in Thrift Stamps to do their "bit" in the war? It is often a story of silent heroism. If those in fairly easy circumstances emulated the very poor whose souls are filled with unyielding resolution to do their share to win the war, what a boom there would be in the Government's receipts from stamp sales.

THE 1917 SUMATRA CROP

As a matter of information to the tobacco trade in general, the Bayuk Bros. Co. of Philadelphia, makes public a cablegram received from Sumatra, March 9, which says: "Estimated 1917 Sumatra crop will produce 35,000 bales, American grades. This exceeds normal requirements by 8,000 bales."

"WETS" WIN IN ALBANY

New York Legislature Fails to Ratify the Prohibition Amendment—Referendum Proposed by Amended Hill-McNab Bill.

ALBANY, March 12.—Hope of ratification of the Federal prohibition amendment this year by the State Legislature was lost today, when the Assembly adopted an amendment to the Hill-McNab ratification resolution by a vote of 85 to 64. The amendment provides that the question shall be decided by a referendum.

This move by the Assembly came after a day marked by spirited debate. The amended Hill-McNab bill will come before the Assembly for a vote on Monday night.

The drys characterized the action as a victory for the saloon and brewery interests, and William H. Anderson, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, not only charged that the Assembly had acted in bad faith, but that there was something sinister in its action. On this score he said:

"No member of the Legislature can possibly escape meeting this question next fall unless he concludes this is a discreet and possibly profitable time for him to retire from public life."

WAR SAVINGS STAMP SALES

WASHINGTON, March 8.—The War Savings Campaign has reached its first $3,000,000 day, as shown by to-day's report of receipts by the Treasury Department. Sales of the savings stamps in the past three days have been:

$2,295,000, $2,970,000 and $3,049,000.

Three millions a day from the thrift stamps provides the Treasury with about one-tenth of the entire amount now being expended by the nation for the war. While $3,000,000 is only 3 cents a day for every man, woman and child in the country, the entire cost of the war is only 30 cents per capita a day.

The National War Savings Committee, delegated by the Treasury to enlist 100,000,000 investors in the "baby bonds" anticipates soon reaching the $6,000,000 a day rate necessary to place the $2,000,000,000 issue within a year. This will be 6 cents a day per capita.

The sale of these stamps will finance the Government's entire emergency shipping program. The current Treasury receipts from their sale are already averaging the cost of building 12,000 tons of shipping a day.

MAJOR BRYANT'S "CARDS"

Major William A. Bryant, who saw forty years of service as a soldier before he retired, finds the old war spirit fired anew in the present crisis of democracy.

He can't shoulder a gun now, of course, but he is doing the next best thing, providing, so far as he can, the sinews of war for younger comrades. He finds himself "burdened" with an extra hundred dollars (he calls them "cards") and sends ten of them from the headquarters of 1st Squadron, National Guard of New Jersey, to the Sun fund, to buy smokes for American soldiers in France, with this letter:

"Retired after forty years' service, I find myself burdened with about 100 of these 'cards,' which I am sending across the seas.

"Please put the ten 'cards' enclosed with 'smokes for the soldiers.' "

IN UNCLE SAM'S GRAIN BIN

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8.—Grain in farmers' hands on March 1, as announced today by the department of agriculture, was: Corn, 1,292,905,000 bushels, or 40.9 per cent. of the 1917 crop. Wheat 111,272,000 bushels, or 17.1 per cent. Oats, 595,195,000 bushels, or 37.5 per cent. Barley, 43,404,000 bushels, or 20.8 per cent.

The quality of wheat in farmers' hands was expected to be much lower than in other years, in view of the pressing demand the food administration has exerted to send that cereal to the allies.

Corn of the 1916 crop on farms March 1 last year amounted to 782,303,000 bushels, or 30.5 per cent. of the crop, and of the 1915 crop, 1,116,559,000 bushels, or 37.2 per cent., was on farms March 1, 1916.

Wheat of the 1916 crop on farms March 1, 1917, amounted to 100,650,000 bushels, or 15.8 per cent., of the crop, and of the 1915 crop, 244,448,000 bushels, or 23.8 per cent. was on farms March 1, 1916.

Oats of the 1916 crop on farms March 1, 1917, amounted to 394,211,000 bushels, or 31.5 per cent. of the crop, and of the 1915 crop, 598,148,000 bushels, or 38.6 per cent., remained on the farms March 1, 1916.

Barley of the 1916 crops on farms March 1, 1917, amounted to 38,244,000 bushels, or 18.2 per cent. of the crop, and of the 1915 crop, 58,301,000 bushels, or 25.5 per cent. of the crop was on farms March 1, 1916.

A "CUT PRICE WAR" IN BUTTE

A fight which is on among the tobacco dealers of Butte, Mont., one of the bitterest waged for many a day, has resulted in a lowering of the selling figure on almost all prepared smoking tobaccos and on most brands of cigarettes.

The fight is the outcome, say some of the dealers, of an effort on the part of one or more large dealers to put smaller competition out of commission. It commenced several days ago, but has just resulted in some big slicing of the prices; and this, as it is pointed out, in the face of very material advances in price on the part of the manufacturers and wholesalers.

As an instance of how some of the prices have been cut, one favorite brand of smoking tobacco has been lowered from 10 cents straight per package to three for a quarter, and one brand of cigarettes from 12½ cents per package to three for a quarter. Snuff drops from 10 cents straight per package to three for a quarter.

"An illustration of how small the margins of the dealers have become," said a prominent retailer dealer quoted by the Anaconda Standard, is contained in the fact that at the very time he received word by telegram from the wholesalers that a brand of cigarettes was to be sold wholesale to retailers at 12 cents per package they were selling retail in his own store retail at 10 cents."

"It is dog eat dog," is the way one of the prominent dealers put the case, in explanation.

E. S. Edwards, one of the directors of the Haytian-American Corporation, has returned to New York after a tour of investigation of the West and South in search of railroad cars loaded with material for the new central the company is building in Hayti. Mr. Edwards finally located the cars near New Orleans and accompanied them until their contents had been discharged into the hold of a vessel bound for the Black Republic. Never in his career, he says, and until recently he was a Vice-President and General Sales Manager of The American Tobacco Co., has he had such an exciting and exhausting experience.

At Hopkinsville, Ky., tobacco buyers have agreed to give to the Red Cross Society one bundle of tobacco from each truck sold. The first day, under this generous plan, the contributions reached $225.

On six acres of ground W. L. Robertson, of Union Star, Ky., raised 8,125 pounds of tobacco, which he sold for $1,868.75. He had the help of only one man, hence his receipts represented net profit to a large extent.

KELSEY'S CASE RESET

A Pueblo Cigar Store Proprietor Accused of Violating the Anti-Liquor Law of Colorado—Postponed a Week.

Frank O. Kelsey, a Pueblo billiard room and cigar store owner, who is charged with a second violation of the liquor laws of Colorado, was brought before Judge J. Ed. Rizer in the district court at Pueblo. The state's delay in producing material witnesses caused postponement.

Kelsey won the opening tilt when the district attorney entered a nolle in one of the cases which had been filed against him. Kelsey was charged with keeping liquor in a public place. A demurrer filed against the three counts pending, including the case which had been nolled, contended that Kelsey's place of business and his home are one and the same and that therefore, he could not be accused of keeping liquor in a public place.

Judge Rizer overruled the demurrer which had been filed covering all cases. It was contended by counsel for the defense, that Kelsey has not been convicted on a first offense of the crimes alleged in the complaints, and that while they are all included in the same law, it requires a second specific offense, to constitute grounds for a trial on the second offense.

Kelsey's attorney asked for a bill of particulars but this was also overruled by the court. He took exception to the ruling in both instances.

When Kelsey was arraigned he entered a plea of not guilty.

HOW AMERICAN INDUSTRY IS HALTED

The conclusions of the board as to the causes of the unsettled condition of labor are that the following influences were of primary importances:

"Increased cost of living and failure of employers in many cases to anticipate this influence.

"Widespread discontent due to a belief that undue profits had been made by employers out of war business.

"Increased independence of the worker due in part to a labor shortage and in part to a feeling that the situation constitutes labor's opportunity for forcing union recognition on closed shop conditions.

"Inequality between wages paid in plants engaged on private work and government or private plants engaged on war work.

"The unsettling influence of the 'cost-plus profit' feature of many war contracts.

"The Federal Administration's virtual indorsement of the eight-hour workday."

The report concludes:

"Indications of improvement in the labor situation in recent months are apparent, but it needs only a cursory reading of the daily press to see that the war industries of the country are still heavily handicapped by labor disputes.

"Co-operation in efforts for the establishment of some workable programme which shall minimize these disturbances, at least for the duration of the war, is the patriotic duty of both employers and employes."

Reporting on employment in factories, the New York State Department of Labor says: "The food, liquors and tobacco group in January, as compared with December, showed decreases of almost 5 per cent in both the number of workers and the aggregate of wages paid. Three of the industries, especially groceries, increased in activity. All of the other industries of the group showed declines.

Was the Most Popular Man in Syracuse

Michael W. Whelan Passes Away— Oldest of the Famous Brothers—A Veteran of the Civil War—An Expert in Merchandising—He Named the United Cigar Stores

Michael W. Whelan, one of the men most prominent in the development of systematized merchandising applied to the retail tobacco business, died Saturday, aged 70, at his home, 614 East Genesee street, Syracuse, N. Y., of intestinal trouble, after an illness of several months.

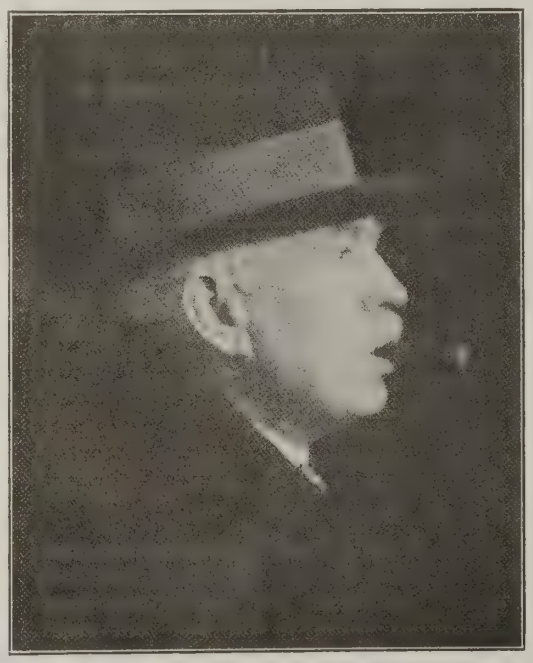
No citizen of Syracuse was more popular nor could a business man stand higher in his home town than Michael W. Whalen did for upwards of half a century.

He had the respect, the confidence, the enduring good will of all.

Self-educated, a great reader, one who assimilated information rapidly, he didn't depend on book knowledge alone; he studied people; he knew human nature; he went far in his searches for methods that would better trade conditions; he judged shrewdly; he made accurate deductions. He could grasp big ideas. And he was generous in sharing with others the results of his labor and planning.

Eldest of the seven Whelan brothers, of whom the best known is George J. Whelan, the founder and former president of the United Cigar Stores Co., Michael W. Whelan in various ways assisted in establishing and upbuilding the business enterprise that now is setting its mark for sales amounting to $50,000,000 a year.

Of undenied Irish ancestry, although born in England on May 12, 1847, fate made him a good American. His parents came to the United States and settled in Syracuse when Michael W. Whelan was a small boy.



He wasn't quite 14 years old when the Civil War commenced, but he desired to enlist. He was eager to fight for the Union. Because of his age, however, recruiting officers declined to accept him. When he was 16 he managed to get into the service. Assigned to duty on a gunboat on the Mississippi River, he participated in the capture of Vicksburg. And, in the Red River campaign, where "gunboat work" was associated with plenty of fighting, young "Mike" Whelan served most creditably.

Returning to Syracuse, after the close of the Civil War, he decided to enter the retail cigar business. Forming a partnership with Ed. J. Lewis, the firm name being Lewis & Whelan, the "youngster from the gunboat" quickly showed that he could develop trade. The store in the Flatiron building in Syracuse became a rendezvous for the best men in town. Ed. J. Lewis died, but under the name of Lewis & Whelan the business was continued. And more, it prospered and expanded. As the Whelan boys grew up, Michael started each one in business. Five entered the cigar trade. When George J. was 19 years old, Michael made him the proprietor of the cigar stand in the Vanderbilt Hotel at Syracuse.

Michael and George J. were always in close touch with each other, and when George J. branched out with the chain store idea Michael advanced him some money. The chain store system was started in Central New York, and after it had proved a success George J. came to New York City and opened a store at 84 Nassau street. Uncertain as to what to call his chain, George went to Michael and asked for suggestions. Michael turned to his desk, and after scribbling on a piece of paper handed the slip to George. On the paper Michael had written: The United Cigar Stores.

While Michael had a great deal to do with shaping the policy of the business, as George had great faith in his brother's judgment, he was not actually connected with the business more than two years.

In politics, Mr. Whelan was a staunch Republican. He was a man prominent for many years in the councils of the party in

The Late Michael W. Whelan

Syracuse. Had he wished, he might have been Mayor. Or other important offices would have been his, if he could have been persuaded to accept. He served one term as city treasurer, but never again could be be induced to occupy a public office.

Long an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic, he ever was ready to assist in any undertaking that was truly patriotic.

He leaves a wife, Mrs. Catherine Whelan; three sons, Fred D., James D. and Robert J.; one daughter, Mrs. Frank Malone; a sister, Mrs. Hugh H. Cassidy, and four brothers, John F., David, Charles A. and George J.

FILIPINO SMOKES FOR OUR SOLDIERS IN FRANCE

Residents of the Philippine Islands are mobilizing to provide smokes for Uncle Sam's soldiers in France, and the first consignment of 30 cases reached a New York dock today. The Tobacco Fund is being raised under a plan fostered by the Philippine National Bank, which has its New York agency in the Woolworth Building.

The smokes contributions comes from the growers and manufacturers in the Philippines, of whom there are many, and in funds from hundreds of persons throughout the islands. It is estimated that several hundred cases of Philippine tobacco will be on their way from Manila in the course of the next few weeks.

U. S. MINT KEPT BUSY

Producing 284,025,785 Bronze Coins in 1917—The Increasing Circulation of Pennies.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—To meet the great demand for copper cents, the United States Mint produced 284,025,785 pieces of the bronze coins last year.

Last year was the largest coinage year in the history of the mint service, according to a report of Director of the Mint Baker, a feature of the year being the coinage of smaller denominations.

The number of coins minted for domestic circulation last year was 500,725,628, valued at $35,538,903.30. The highest previous record was in 1907, when 218,505,563 pieces were struck.

The increased circulation of pennies is attributed to the operation of the revenue law provision for the payment of penny taxes with theatre admissions, telephone taxes and revenue stamps.

In certain cities trolley car rides have increased to six cents, thus demanding a large circulation of pennies.

A shortage of pennies in one Western city caused one organization to issue paper penny certificates, redeemable for paper money when a sufficient number accumulate.

Over seventeen million coins for foreign countries were minted last year.

The striking of 35,840,050 pieces of metallic money for Central America and the Philippine Islands, and the preparation of 500,000 gold and 1,101,278 silver planchets for a South American republic, Director Baker says, contributed to the making of a very active year.

MOST PLEASANT DANCE

Employes of Park & Tilford Had a Very Enjoyable Entertainment at Harlem Masonic Hall, Saturday Evening.

With Frank Tilford and John A. Badenoch acting as patrons of the entertainment, officials and employes of Park & Tilford had a most enjoyable dance, which was attended by more than 400 people, Saturday evening. The Masonic Hall, at 125th Street and Lenox Avenue, New York, was the scene of the festivities, which were made the more pleasing because they were somewhat informal.

John A. Badenoch and Mrs. Buckner led the grand march. The dancing committee included Mrs. Hardy, Miss Feitner, Mr. Le Sueur and Mr. Botjer.

The bringing together of the heads of the various departments, the salesmen, and other employes, gave Irvin Studwell, the new manager of the cigar department, an opportunity to become better acquainted with his fellow workers, as well as affording every one a chance to have a good night's fun.

Refreshments were served and all minded to practice the latest steps had a splendid opportunity so to do, until midnight. Prominent among the guests was Robert E. Lane, the Partagas representative, who, report says, "had the time of his young life."

ALL ARE OBLIGATED

Death is the penalty imposed on a sentry guilty of sleeping on post.

No excuse suffices for a soldier who fails to do his duty.

Nor, in time of war, is an apathetic, negligent citizen exempt from blame.

The soldier is expected to die, if need be.

Our men "over there" will do all that may be demanded of them, and more.

They will do their part, nobly, towards winning the war.

If victory is retarded, or failure made possible, it will be because people here haven't proved sufficiently their loyalty and zeal.

Diluted patriotism, inefficiency, indisposition to work for the country, unwillingness to make sacrifices necessary to insure success, lack of co-ordination, inclination to let the other fellow do what has to be done, faults such as these may not approximate the criminality of treason or be so reprehensible as the acts of an out-and-out slacker, but they are things that imperil the United States in this war.

Each man, woman and child in the United States, who can do even the least thing that will aid in winning the war, is obligated to help.

Refusal to assist the nation now has but one meaning.

THE FIVE-CENTER PASSES.

And now another humble but honored institution is to go the way of all things earthly! The tobacco dealers of Philadelphia, in solemn session assembled, have warned that one more cent is to be added to the price of what was in better days the five-cent cigar, but has lately verified Shakespeare's observation as to what's in a name by smelling as sweet under the designation of six-center.

Perhaps it is not known to the average resident that Philadelphia has long been hailed by the traveling public as the last of the large cities which has clung to the five-cent cigar. This has undeniably been one of our distinctions along with others that may perhaps be considered more important, but surely not more interesting.

Who shall celebrate the glories of the five-center?—the smoke of the people. Their brands are legion and how many stand out in blessed memory, from the one that made the phrase "generously good" famous on the signboards of a nation to the more humble favorite made in the back room of a local tobacco merchant!

When they announced that one cent was to be added to the immemorial price as a war measure, there was grumbling, but it was let pass for it seemed likely to be a temporary thing. Now it is plain there is to be price revision upward instead of downward, and once seven cents is reached all hope is gone.

What is to be the solution? Since the smoking sex will not carry pennies for change there seem to be only two ways out, either the acceptance of the aristocratic ten-center or the glorification of the stogie.—Philadelphia Press.

MAY TAKE OVER EXPRESS COMPANIES.

Washington, March 12.—Government control probably will be extended shortly to the leading express companies, it was officially intimated today at the railroad administration. The companies that would be affected are the Adams, American, Wells-Fargo, Southern, Great Northern, Northern, Canadian and Western.

Most express companies' earnings last year were far below the record of the year before, and some, notably the Adams, recorded an actual deficit in the latter months. Government operation and compensation on the basis of the average earnings for the last three years are sought by most companies. Since the government took over the railroads representatives of the companies have conferred repeatedly with railroad administration officials, urging that the government take over their interests.

Some decision probably will be reached within ten days. Action has been delayed by discussions of the proper basis of compensation.

An application of the express companies for a 10 per cent increase in rates is pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

AS A SOLDIER SEES IT

"When they knew that war was inevitable, they began to cry aloud: 'How soon will it end? Will it end before we have to make any sacrifices—before we lose our profits, before we know hunger and unhappiness and pain?' That was the first reaction, and they're just beginning to get over it.

"I'll tell them when it will end—it will end when the men who trampled down Belgium and France, who murdered people like cattle, who ruined the fruit trees and burned the homes—it will end when those men feel the grip of the world at their throats. It will end when the crowd who started this war of lust and loot are in full retreat, when Willie down at Verdun is shouting to papa at Berlin: 'Come, for God's sake!' and papa up at Berlin is screaming to Willie at Verdun: 'Run, for God's sake!' It will end with the siege of the Rhine!

"That's when it will end if it's left to us fellows who are going over. We're ready to stand in ice water up to our waists, to live with the rats in a rain of German shells, to go over the top and be finished. Nobody need worry about our boys over there. But how about the bunch left over here—the crowd that wants to know how soon it will end? Are they going to queer us? Will they fall for the German tricks? Will the pacifists turn their blood to water? Only one thing can do for us—and that isn't the German army. It's our own people at home. Maybe some guy in Terre Haute will get tired putting three-cent stamps on his letters. Maybe some fellow in Cleveland will get sick of the graham bread. Maybe some fat little soul in Denver will get to worrying about his profits. And they'll come together and decide that it's no use fighting it to a finish—and where will we be?"—E. D. Biggers in Collier's.

On Historic Ground

After his vessel, the Tiger, was burned in 613, Adrian Block built four huts, the earli- st structures erected by white men on Man- attan Island. The stout little log cabin at he South end of the row was used as a :orehouse. The spot, where New York's rst mercantile building stood is known today s 39 Broadway. And the location has his- oric interest aside from the fact that it was ccupied by the first Dutch settlers. The ite of the pioneer emporium of Niew Ams- erdam did not lose importance when the English superseded the Dutch, nor when the olony of New York became one of the origi- al thirteen that constituted the United States. It was the President's residence nce.

George Washington lived at 39 Broadway oon after he was inaugurated as President f the United States.

Where Washington then dwelt now rises superb building being erected for the ex- lusive use of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, nc., and subsidiary corporations. Covering umbers 35, 37 and 39, the structure extends rom Broadway through the block to Trinity 'lace. The main entrance and the offices of he Globe Line Steamship Co., owned by Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, Inc., will oc- upy the extreme right hand space from vhich the elevators and staircase will com- nunicate with the upper floors.

As described in the G. W. W. Bulletin, 'Each of the upper floors will be arranged n as large an open space as possible, with a ight shaft extending down through the mid- lle of the building to the roof of the first loor. The Broadway front will be con- structed of concrete stone—the first time this very modern form of construction has been used on lower Broadway.

"The general front will have a strong base course with two monumental columns and two monumental pilasters at either end—47 feet high in the clear from base to cap, and approxi- mately 5 feet in diameter. This will make the facade one of the most imposing and dignified among all the other buildings that exist in this section of most handsome structures."

A new structure being erected where Adrian Block built the first hut on Manhattan Island —and where once stood the house in which President Washington lived.

WAR MAY BE LONG

"We realize that this war may not be, even from now, a short war.

"I am not venturing to prophesy. I am only speaking, after all, with the same judgment which you can form when you read the news of the day. But I am convinced of this, that the way to make a short war is to prepare for a long war, and that nothing will be nearer to bringing the war to a conclusion than the knowledge of the preparations which you are actually making and which you will continue to make.

"In the end, we shall together be able to say that we have conquered for liberty and for justice."—From the speech of Lord Reading.

JOHN BARLEYCORN LEAVES CANADA

OTTAWA, Ont., March 11.—Canada, except for the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, will go dry April 1, and on December 31 the legal cases in Quebec and Ontario will vanish and the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors will be prohibited throughout the Dominion.

Under regulations issued to-night the manufacture and sale of liquor is prohibited, but in Quebec beer may be manufactured and in Ontario whiskey and native wines made until the end of the present year. The new regulations, which supplement provincial laws, also prohibit the transport of liquors into or their delivery in prohibited areas.

MANY CARS IN BAD ORDER

WASHINGTON, March 11.—While freight congestion throughout the country has been relieved to a great extent since the break in the winter weather, the situation has not cleared up in a manner entirely satisfactory to those in charge of the operation of the roads.

Interstate Commerce Commissioner McChord, in a report to Director General McAdoo to-day states that freight movement is still hampered owing to a shortage of man power and to the increasing number of "bad order" cars.

In speaking about the congestion at the Susquehanna yards of the Erie Railroad, Commissioner McChord reports "that accumulation is due to lack of material such as brake beams, lockblocks and uncoupling levers; also to the lack of sufficient car repair men."

The Director General has a committee at work upon these problems, and it is his intention just as soon as the Railroad Bill becomes a law to spend a considerable sum of money in the purchase of new equipment for the roads wherever it is found necessary.

UNCLE SAM LOANS CUBA $15,000,000

HAVANA, March 11.—The American Government, it is announced, has offered to lend the Cuban Government $15,000,000, to be used in carrying on the war against Germany. The loan will draw 5 per cent. interest and will be guaranteed by the $30,000,000 Cuban bond issue.

Last September the Republic of Cuba authorized the announcement that half of the Cuban government's $30,000,000 war bond issue, decided upon shortly before that time, had been subscribed by the United States Treasury.

PORTO RICO GOES "DRY"

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, March 3.—Porto Rico went "dry" at midnight last night. This followed an act of Congress, which the election of last July failed to repeal. This act prohibits the importation, manufacture, sale or gift of intoxicating liquors or drugs. A local law permits the manufacture and sale of beer containing not exceeding 2½ per cent of alcohol.

The Bank of Cuba in New York

The average man doesn't even guess the magnitude of Cuba's trade. Nor does every financier remember that one Cuban bank is about to enter the hundred million dollar class.

According to official figures, trade between the United States and Cuba in 1895 amounted to $65,000,000. In 1905, it was $125,000,000; in 1910, it reached $176,000,000; in 1913, the year before the war, it totalled $187,000,000; in 1917, however, it exceeded $445,000,000, and it promises to increase again, this year.

Trade so tremendously developed, exchange of commodities of immense value, of course is associated with banking business, in proportion. In the Island Republic, the biggest financial institution is the National Bank of Cuba which on December 31, 1917, had scheduled assets, duly verified, amounting to $90,003,708.42 in U. S. currency.

Deposits in the National Bank of Cuba have been steadily augmented, since the first of the year, and, rather conservatively it may be predicted that, by the middle of June, helped by the marketing of the coming sugar crop, the assets shown by the bank will be in excess of $100,000,000.

Successor to an American trust company established in Havana soon after the Spanish American War, the National Bank of Cuba became bigger and stronger, each year. It had, and yet has, plenty of competition. But it developed constantly, because, above all else, it represented security and service. Many things, chief among them, perhaps, the prosperity of Cuba, contributed to the bank's wonderful success.

A preferred depository, it strove to be something more. It offered unexcelled banking facilities. So far as prudent banking would permit, it laid stress on its ability to serve. It was entirely up-to-date in its methods. It multiplied conveniences. It could place a customer quickly in touch with any part of the world a bank might reach. Any thing a banker reasonably might be expected to do, the National Bank of Cuba attended to, speedily, cheerfully and satisfactorily. And the solidity of the institution was attested to all who dealt with the bank.

So the National Bank of Cuba grew and grew and grew. As it became bigger and stronger, year after year, it sought to increase its usefulness.

Vice President J. T. Monahan in his private office

Interior View of the Bank of Cuba in New York

Originally, as a convenience for customers, who came to New York, the National Bank of Cuba established an agency at 1 Wall street. From the viewpoint of a depositor who happened to be in the metropolis, the New York agency of the National Bank of Cuba was shown to be very helpful. It was a trysting place for Cubans who had business in New York. It was a source of information much frequented by American manufacturers and merchants who sought advice concerning the financial standing of prospective buyers in Cuba. The agency facilitated collections, it made the transmission of money easier, it aided the bank in buying or selling foreign exchange.

In many respects the New York agency was a desirable appurtenance to the National Bank of Cuba. But because it was an appanage to a foreign institution, it could not receive deposits nor otherwise do a banking business here.

As trade developed and the financial relations of the United States and Cuba became more important and intimate, the need for a bank here that could handle Cuban business most advantageously and expeditiously was made apparent.

Organized under the laws of the State of New York, the Bank of Cuba in New York, with a capital of $100,000 and a surplus of $50,000, commenced business on May 11, 1916.

The statement of conditions of the Bank of Cuba in New York on December 31, 1917, was as follows:

RESOURCES

Bonds	$78,759.41
Cash on hand and in reserve depositaries	479,508.29

In fact an independent institution, in law a New York State bank surrounded by all the safeguards provided, the Bank of Cuba in New York is in a position to receive deposits, make loans, buy good commercial paper and properly transact all business such as other State banks here do. But, in addition it has unequalled arrangements for the facilitation of financial transactions between the United States and Cuba.

Through connections with the National Bank of Cuba and its 40 branches, the Bank of Cuba in New York can handle collections or transmit money with the utmost expedition. Concerning credits desirable to be granted in Cuba, the bank here has up-to-the-minute information. Nowhere else in the United States is it possible to obtain the authoritative advice that the Bank of Cuba in New York can give, pertaining to Cuban business. To American manufacturers or merchants figuring on shipping goods to any place in the Island Republic, the Bank of Cuba in New York can be of practical assistance. Also, importers of leaf tobacco and Havana cigars may derive advantage by availing themselves of the facilities afforded by the Bank of Cuba in New York.

As W. A. Merchant, president of the Bank of Cuba in New York, likewise is president of the National Bank of Cuba, naturally he is a resident of Havana and devotes most of his time to the larger institution. Long associated with the great success attained by the National Bank of Cuba, President Merchant continues his work there.

Vice-President J. T. Monahan is the active executive of the Bank of Cuba in New York. Undeniably, he is an able and dependable man. After serving his apprenticeship on Wall street, he went to Havana to be a clerk in the law office of Page & Conant, leading American attorneys in Cuba, just after the Spanish American War closed. From the law office, he was transferred to a position of trust with the Havana Gas and Electric Co. Next he was promoted to a desk in the banking house of Zaldo & Co. In a comparatively short time his services were desired by the National Bank of Cuba. Soon made manager of the branch bank at Cienfuegos, he showed such aptitude and reliability that he was brought back to Havana and placed in charge of the important Monte branch. There he made an enviable record.

When it was known that he was about to be sent to the United States to manage the New York agency, business men in the Monte district expressed much regret, and big depositors went to the head office of the bank and protested that "Monahan was such a good man they all desired to retain him permanently at the Monte branch."

Managing the New York agency of the National Bank of Cuba, at 1 Wall street for years, Monahan earned honorable distinction in the financial district. Concerning what he has done, and is doing, in building up business for the Bank of Cuba in New York, the figures speak more eloquently than words.

Just now, the Bank of Cuba in New York is obtaining many desirable new accounts, not only from local concerns but also from manufacturers and merchants in different parts of the country. And more and more, it is becoming a bank recognized and utilized by those having trade extending to Cuba and Porto Rico.

The exceptionally good service that the bank gives, is the cause. Ably assisting Vice-President Monahan, the other officers of the bank are Charles F. Plarre, cashier, and L. G. Jones and L. R. Devere, assistant cashiers.

On the board of directors of the Bank of Cuba in New York are W. A. Merchant, president of the National Bank of Cuba; J. T. Monahan, vice-president; H. M. Earle, of Hornblower, Miller, Garrison & Potter; M. H. Lewis, president of the Guantanamo & Western Railroad and president of the Santa Cecilia Sugar Co.; and Pelayo Riera, of Riera, Toro and Van Twistern.

EFFICIENT LOADING

Enabled the Pennsylvania Railroad to "Save" 73,562 Freight Cars in a Month—Increased Tonnage.

The Pennsylvania Railroad announced last week that as a result of the campaign to make freight cars do more work the use of 73,562 cars was saved on its lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie in the month of December, 1917, by more efficient loading. This is shown in reports which have just been compiled for every division.

The average load carried by each freight car on the eastern lines in December, 1917, was 37.23 tons, as compared with 31.70 tons in the corresponding month of the previous year, or an increase of five and a half tons per car.

Efforts to increase car loading on the Pennsylvania Railroad have been carried on for many years, but have been conducted in a systematic way since the early part of 1916, when this work was placed in charge of a special department under the jurisdiction of the superintendent of stations and transfers.

In 1915 the average load carried per car was less than twenty-nine tons. The increase since that time has amounted to more than eight tons per car, or approximately 30 per cent. As there are 164,000 freight cars on the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie, this increase in the average loading has been equivalent to the addition of 49,000 cars.

"What's the Matter With the Movies"

An Inside Story Told by One Who Knows

Moving pictures have become white elephants to more than one big producer; and despite the fact that pictures are just as popular as ever, some of the well-known firms have gone into bankruptcy, quite a few are on the verge of it, while others have combined interests to prevent financial disaster. Many are groping in the dark, wondering just what the morrow will bring forth. When you query any of the big moguls in hot water what he thinks of the future, he will either tell you he does not know or he will hand you a theory that contradicts the opinion of the next authority questioned.

Every day palatial picture theatres turn away hundreds of movie fans eager to pay for the privilege of seeing stars like Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, and in the small towns, where the picture house has become an institution, fans are even more enthusiastic. Here the manager stands at the door to welcome the doctor, the lawyer, the merchant, and the tiller of the soil and his family. And he sagaciously notifies his patrons when their favorite players are booked for his house.

Now, with everybody ready to patronize pictures, it seems rather strange that the business should be so frequently associated with losing ventures. In the beginning it was a bonanza for all. Then the crowds gladly shelled out small change to see the Empire Express shoot by in a fifty-foot film. Later, when the novelty had worn off, some student of public taste conceived the idea of screening little stories. Vacant lots and roof tops were turned into studios, where some of the producers, now millionaires, cranked their own cameras.

With the introduction of stories, actors and old stage directors capable of rehashing ancient ideas were engaged to act and direct the revamps. And when the directors could no longer furnish suitable material the producers advertised in various periodicals offering five and ten dollars for story ideas, which the directors whipped into shape, thereby creating a new form of technique.

Throughout the land former butcher shops and bakeries were converted into movie shows, as the demand for pictures increased. The producers doubled their efforts and practically everything they turned out earned large profits. Quantity, not quality, was the standard, and when a picture was shelved, which was seldom, its trip to the discard resulted from irreparable mechanical defects.

The exhibitors finally tired of the slipshod methods and formed national and local organizations. Formerly the exhibitor used to accept as gospel truth every word that dropped from the publicity man's lips; but to-day he listens to the ravings of the publicity man and comes back with the following:

"I'll wait until I see how Johnson makes out with your world beater. Then if I think my people will like it, I'll book it."

"But didn't you see the trade reviews?"

"Sure! And your two-page ad. The ad. was a corker. But I'll form my own opinion about the picture."

The exhibitor takes this attitude because of the demands and criticisms of his patrons, and it is no easy task for some of the movie-makers to meet the quality requirements after having devoted years to the quantity theory. To-day a glance at a picture poster is sufficient for the sophisticated fans to decide whether they desire to see any particular picture. The fans have learned to distinguish claptrap from quality, and as the former predominates it will be seen that inferior pictures represent a loss to the makers, for poor pictures cost just as much to make, sometimes more, as good ones. Furthermore, strange to say, a picture may be artistic and popular, and still, resulting from lack of business efficiency, be a financial loss.

On the other hand, a good picture backed by proper business methods, is practically certain to return large profits, which was proved in 1911, when the Kalem Company sent a set of players to Egypt and the Holy Land to picturize in the exact locations the principal events in the life of Christ. It was the first feature picture done by any American company, and was called "From the Manger to the Cross."

Before the Sheik of a certain village would allow photographs to be taken of the tomb of Lazarus, Sidney Olcott, the director, and Alice Hollister, one of the stars, had to hobnob with the Shiek and drink about two quarts of his wretched coffee. The Mohammedans were not won over so easily. They became enraged over the idea of extolling Christianity, showed hostility at every step, and even threatened death to some of the players, forcing Olcott to appeal to the authorities for protection. As a result, a troop of Turkish soldiers roped off the streets of Jerusalem to keep the infuriated mob from massacring the players while at work.

Other feature pictures that were handled properly are: "Quo Vadis," produced by Cines of Italy, and shown here in 1913; "Cabiria," produced by the Italian poet, D'Annunzio, and presented in this country in 1914; "The Birth of a Nation," by D. W. Griffith, in 1915, and "Intolerance," by Griffith, in 1916.

These features are cogent proof of the possibilities of movies of a magnificent order. In each case, however, artistic worth and business efficiency were absolutely essential.

During the evolution of the "big" picture, numerous multiple-reel pictures were imported from Europe and found favor with the American public, emphasizing the fact to American producers that a "feature" could be a money-maker just as easily as one- and two-reelers. Then a demand arose for longer pictures, not requiring individual exploitation, with the public still clinging to the idea of seeing several pictures on one program; and as a result, a new element of manufacturers began to specialize on five-reel features.

The first concerted effort brought out the Famous Players, headed by Daniel Frohman, who, after starring Sarah Bernhardt in a foreign-made film, "Queen Elizabeth," produced the first feature made in this country, "The Prisoner of Zenda," with James K. Hackett as the star. Immediately old producers plunged into the feature waters in competition with the newcomers, while the newcomers continued to leap in and flounder about overnight. The pace grew hot. The inexperienced squandered their money in wild dreams and faded into oblivion. Those who hung on with business organizations behind them found the pace growing hotter and hotter. In most cases they had been turning out junk, but junk or gems they felt that they must have something to feature, be it a star, a play, or a book.

This wild scramble brought out stars of doubtful value. Many stage celebrities proved fiascos, owing to the camera's cruel method of exposing deficiencies that grease paint and brilliant dialogue cover up on the stage. In their mad search for "something," the producers purchased the screen rights to plays and books, simply for a name to play up, and in many instances there was not as much as a situation in book or play around which a movie plot could be built. One novel that had never sold, and possessing about as much dramatic value as a Mother Goose rhyme, brought $8,000. The manager of the company, who knew more about raising suspension bridges than he did about literature and drama, is said to be still gunning for the stenographer who recommended the purchase of the book rights.

About this time the doubtful stars and half-baked directors found their salaries boosted beyond their wildest dreams. The pay roll however, was not the only thing that worried the man who passed out the shekels. He, poor soul, did not know just what second Heezanut would demand to be supplied with two hundred expensively gowned supernumeraries for his ballroom scene, and all because Director Suchaboob of a rival company had employed a hundred extras in a similar scene at five dollars each a day. This farce of trying to outdo one another in spectacular effects grew into sheer insanity, but the directors worried not. Scenes that heretofore had been satisfactorily staged on some handsome estate near New York must now be done in Florida or Virginia—two or three scenes, mind you. And when one of these expensive features brought popularity to a director or player, each would receive tempting overtures from other companies, forcing the boss to come across with another raise in salary if he did not wish to be minus a director or star.

Owing to the ease with which capital could be raised, producers continued to flock to the field, laughing at the fact that strong business organizations controlled approximately all the picture houses. One concern of this sort (best designated as the Ephermal Company) signed up several stage stars at salaries ranging from $1,000 a week upward. Long time contracts were drawn up without any picture vehicles in sight. The Ephermal eventually made two pictures, which had to be shelved from lack of markets. The stars and directors continued to draw the fat salaries without turning a hand, until the boss and his contributing dupes refused to be bled any longer. Then the scene shifted to the courts. And the Ephermal was but one of many.

In a way, it was demonstrated that any one with money can make moving pictures. But it takes brains to make them at a profit. Overproduction caused a slashing of rental prices, and some of the pioneers began to slip, for when the total rentals equal but a fraction of the cost of production, the result is obvious. Certain producers have come to realize at last that the picture business must be conducted just the same as any other branch of commerce.

Meanwhile, new marketing plans have bobbed up. The latest is the company headed by a star. Heretofore, producers having stars have offered a "program" in conjunction with business allies. The Paramount, embracing several other releasing companies, offered two plays a week, featuring different stars. Clara Kimball Young's success at the head of her own company makes it look as if the day of the "program" exhibitor is doomed.

The veriest layman does not have to accept any one's word to feel assured that productions like "The Birth of a Nation," and the other mentioned earlier in the article are things apart. They were not intended for the regular picture houses, but for individual exploitation. Report has it that D'Annunzio spent two years in producing "Cabiria," and one has but to see the picture to believe the statement. You may marvel at the time, money, and energy expended to obtain certain spectacular scenes in the Alps, on the desert, and the sea coast, in addition to the mammoth scenes in the huge temples and battlements, but you may not know that D'Annunzio had a topnotch business concern behind him, and that the Alps, desert, and sea coast are all within a short distance of the studio in Italy, where many of the leading players in "Cabiria" were at the same time working in other pictures, thus filling in all spare time. Another advantage he had was that Italian supernumeraries work for what your merican super would decline for luncheon oney.

The "Birth of a Nation" is another striking xample of what can be accomplished by brains nd a real director. In 1915 David Griffith felt hat the time was ripe for something out of the rdinary—something big in theme and price. n the face of much ridicule, he and J. J. Mc-arthy persisted that a Broadway show price ould be no bar to success, provided that some-hing really big could be offered. A two-ollar picture, according to their logic, would e likely to cause comment and lead many to ay: "If those fellows have the nerve to ask wo dollars for a picture and show it in a Broadway house they must have something ig." The two were right in their reasoning, or later thousands paid to see it merely out of uriosity.

The "Birth of a Nation" ran for forty-eight veeks at the Liberty Theatre, New York City, veraging $9,800 a week; and seventeen weeks n Pittsburgh, at $9,600 a week. It played to nore business during its first fourteen weeks han that of a well-known stage success did in welve years.

Thirty prints of the film were made, and very print that went on the road, whether to Philadelphia or Seattle, was accompanied by picked company, including an orchestra, an perator, and other mechanics needed to stage picture properly. Nothing was entrusted to trangers. Complete reports from every com-any were turned into headquarters.

Now, to send out thirty companies of a Broadway stage success would cost a tremend-ous sum, as the salaries of the cast would con-inue week after week, whether business hap-ened to be good or bad; but in a production ike "The Birth of a Nation," the big salaries topped once the picture was finished. It took long time to make the picture, and one can et some idea of the pains and time from the fact that Griffith spent thirty-six hours with Mae Marsh on a scene that is flashed on the screen in forty-six seconds.

Griffith originally started to produce Dixon's 'The Clansman" for the Majestic-Reliance, and later discovered that the story offered a much bigger theme than that covered by Dixon. The latter's story dealt with the Reconstruction period, whereas Griffith conceived a story por-traying the introduction of slavery, the admin-stration and assassination of Lincoln, as well as several battles of the Civil War—thus lead-ing up to the Reconstruction era. To produce and market such a gigantic picture necessitated new business arrangements. New capital and new business acumen were secured, and what they accomplished is now history.

Many of the producers of ordinary features have infinite worries. They have discovered that their directors and stars are all powerful, and they have no way of telling "what they've got" until the thing is done; and by that time fifty thousand dollars may have been squand-ered. Once in a while a good director bobs up and turns out an excellent picture at a reasonable cost, but in most cases the director finishes with what may be termed a fair picture artistically, but a financial flivver.

In the published gossip of the studios one reads much of this type of director. Frequently he is called the three-in-one, meaning author, actor and director. He writes the story, takes the lead, and personally directs the whole she-bang. If a certain situation does not logically call for his appearance he contrives to crowd into it in some manner, and hugs the camera in order to have his dinner ring register.

The fate of the three-in-one in stage annals is history, but history means nothing to the movie three-in-one. He draws a thousand a week, has lace curtains in his limousine, and wears a sport shirt on Broadway. He worries no more about squandering his employer's money in unnecessary, lavish outlays, than he does over the fact that his sport shirt belongs at the beach or country club. He has entirely forgotten the days of the old "one-nighters," when most any kind of a shirt would do, and now he thinks that money, particularly other people's money, is made to spend. One of the prominent three-in-one directors, for instance, has to have an orchestra play while he is rehearsing a scene, as it renders his artistic temperament more acutely responsive to the work before him.

Another three-in-one charters a special train to carry several hundred "extras" to a race-track, where he uses but a third, in spite of the fact that the boss has to pay all. He puts them in a scene in the corner of a grand stand, which could have been staged just as satisfactorily in some local ball park. All he really needs is a few feet of a cheering crowd. Another of this calibre will take a company to Mississippi to produce a scene in a sawmill, and usually, after having canned his assistant for having the temerity to say, "I know where there's just the kind of a sawmill over in Jersey."

"H—l!" explodes the three-in-one. "That would never get into the papers. If the other companies don't hear about me they won't recognize my name some day when I ask 'em for a job."

And there is no rest for the boss of one of these companies, if such a thing as a real boss exists, even when the three-in-one directors are squandering money wantonly in Alabama or Buenos Ayres.

November Blossom, starred by a real director, contributes her share of trouble to the boss. Some "perfect cat" engaged by the day, may be taking up too much film to suit her, which fact she rubs under the boss's nose with a threat to quit. The leading man, too, must be fired. He is a "camera louse," and crowds her behind some "prop" every time they are in a scene. And as November Blossom, pretty and pouty, is drawing steen hundred over a thousand a week, the boss has no alternative but to can those treading on her toes.

In spite of all this rumpus and chaos, the movies, the ideal, inexpensive entertainment, are here to stay. And when the fool conditions and others are eliminated, and the industry is conducted on sane business principles, pictures will not only improve in quality, but the business will become financially sound. Eventually A, B and C will combine to oust D and E. Then A, B and C will run their affairs like other big business men. The real business manager will have his inning. And he will not emerge from the fish trade or the cotton fields of Wall Street. He will not only know pic-

Manila cigars then held a firm place on the American Market. SIX and NINE cents were popular prices for smokes at the close of the Civil War, and Manilas sold for exactly the same money—size for size—as the Imported Havanas.

High Tariffs, made necessary by the public debt and the cost of war, excluded Manila cigars from the United States until Free Trade was again established with the Philippine Islands in 1910. SINCE THEN THAT TRADE HAS GROWN FROM 67,261,-545, IMPORTED IN 1915, TO 215,693,368 IN 1917.

Labor Trouble Retards Work in St. Louis

Union Makes Various Demands of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.—About 500 Have Been on Strike for a Week—Consumers Not Averse to Paying Six Cents for Cigars—"Bill" Bailey's Convincing Testimony—Sweney Manages Cigar Stands at the Big Station.

St. Louis, March 9.—A strike of workers employed in the three big factories of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., Tower Grove and Folsom avenues, has been called for Monday morning. A resolution to call an immediate strike of these workers was decided upon at a mass meeting held at New Club Hall this afternoon. The vote of 800 present was said to be unanimous. The company employs a force of 3,500 workers, of which about half are women and girls, and all will be asked to join in the strike.

According to James Hilton, president of Local No. 140, it has a membership of 2,100. The demands include recognition of the union, an 8-hour day and wage increases of 25 to 100 per cent. for different classes of workers. Employes now earn from $1,50 to $3.50 a day. The demands were all rejected by Edward T. Noland, Jr., general manager of the company, after a conference with the grievance committee.

More than 500 workers, most twist markers, have been out for a week. Anthony McAndrew of Cincinnati, International President of the Union, will ask that a Federal mediator be sent here to effect a settlement. McAndrew has cautioned the strikers against rough tactics.

The labor unrest has spread to many lines since the motormen and conductors won their fight for recognition of their union several weeks ago. A mass meeting of union labor men and women and their sympathizers probably will be held March 17 at the Coliseum. Union leaders say the meeting will be to show the strength of the union movement, and the feeling of workers that they should receive a larger share of profits. Many lines of endeavor are at present affected by the unrest.

Of interest to the dealer who has not had the courage to advance the price of cigars is the statement of W. H. ("Bill") Bailey, who travels through Central Illinois and Iowa for the Parker-Gordon Cigar Co.'s St. Louis branch, of which I. H. Gilley is manager. Mr. Bailey has found that in towns where the price has been advanced to 6 cents, in line with the increase made by the jobbers and manufacturers, the consumer has not complained, and that the retailer is more than pleased with the results. "The consumer generally is alive to the conditions that exist," said Mr. Bailey, "and he realizes that the war tax and the increased cost of labor and tobacco and boxes is higher, and that cigars should cost more. Of course, some consumers are buying some of the 5-cent brand of cigars. A majority of the dealers are selling for 5 cents cigars that would cost them now $43 a thousand. This is very poor business."

Harry A. Sweney, one of the best known men in the retail tobacco trade of St. Louis, has been appointed manager of the cigar stands in Union Station. This concession was recently purchased by Fred Harvey from Charles S. Gilpin, who had been operating there since the station was built, twenty-five years ago. Two stands are now being operated. Mr. Sweney has been with the retail department of the Stickney-Hoelscher Cigar Co. for the last three years. He is a native of St. Louis, and began his career with the late W. A. Stickney, a pioneer cigar man. R. L. Greene will succeed Mr Sweney. He has been out of the trade for several years, but was formerly connected with Stickney's.

The work of altering the building at the southwest corner of Seventh Street and Washington Avenue, two floors of which will be occupied by the Wolff-Wilson Drug Co., is going on at a rapid pace.

An aggressive advertising campaign in the daily newspaper is now being conducted by F. D. Ware Tobacco Co., Richmond, Va., in behalf of Bare-Kats, their brand of cigarettes. The St. Louis distributors are Brinkmann-Meisel & Recker Cigar Co.

tures, but will be practical in other lines. To a director who tells him that only in Maine under a certain apple tree can he get what he wants for a picture, the real manager will say, "Show me why."

When the ideal manager comes across a $1,000 director paring his nails, because no play has been provided, or others are using the studios, he will very likely remark: "Apparently we have too many directors." Or he will readjust matters so that all may earn their salaries. The inflated salaries, too, will get a big puncture. The army of three-in-ones will be hunting for purchasers for the lace-curtained limousines, while the November Blossoms devise means and ways of existing until the coming of the June roses and seashore jobs. But the picture business will be good; the public will enjoy good pictures, and this indifferent old world will roll on in the same old way.

Much Depends On How You Do It

Carey was the first salesman to hit the road representing ——— cigars. While he had faith in the brand, he knew that it had not been advertised to any great extent. He expected to encounter indifference and to find a lack of interest on the part of dealers who had been in the habit of buying other brands, no better in quality, but better advertised. Carey's employer believed in advertising, but his small bank roll did not permit him to purchase much space.

"The stuff is there, 'Carey,'" his employer said on the morning he was about to leave. "Get a flying start! Try and land your first sale and it will give you confidence!"

Carey's first attempt to sell was to a dealer in a city of 25,000 inhabitants up state. On entering the store he found the proprietor behind the counter waiting on several finicky customers. The proprietor looked as though he could enjoy getting rid of a grouch, making Carey feel that it might be a poor time to tackle him for a bill of goods.

Carey looked at his watch and noted it was half past one. Possibly the proprietor had not had his luncheon, which might account for his blue looks. Accepting this as a fact, Carey decided to postpone the talk and come back later when a filled stomach might make the proprietor more inclined to talk.

"J just dropped in to have a little talk on business," Carey said, as he started for the door, "but I see you're too busy just now. I'll run in after luncheon."

Outside, Carey ran into another salesman carrying several extensively advertised brands.

"Stick him with any stuff?" asked the other man. "Or didn't you try?"

Carey shook his head in sort of a dejected way, and while so doing did some tall thinking. Here was a fellow who felt that a dealer should feel honored by a visit from him. And by sending him into the proprietor at this time might kill the sure fire fellow's business and help his own later.

"I went in there," said Carey, "but the look I got sure stopped me from taking out my samples."

"Friend," the other said, half a smile and half a sneer on his lips, "never back up from anything. Any one can sell them what they want and when they want to buy, but my long suit is making them do as I want. Watch me!"

Carey did not wait to watch, taking it for granted that the man did not have one chance in a hundred to do business.

At three Carey returned and found the proprietor in a jovial mood.

"How do you feel now?" Carey asked. "I noted you had a couple of trying customers when I was in here before."

The boss nodded. "And what was worse I had one of those know it all guys blow in here and try to tell me what I needed. What I did need was a good feed, but he didn't seem to sense it and didn't offer to buy one for me."

Two customers entering the store prevented further conversation for the time being. Within a few seconds one of the customers had picked out a cigar but did not know whether to buy it or not. Carey knew the brand and knew that it was O. K.

"If you don't mind my intruding," he said, "I think you will find a great smoke in that cigar. I have so much faith in it that I'll make you a present of five of my own brand as a guarantee. Smoke them, and if you like them Mr. Dorse will sell you others at the regular price."

The customer lighted one of Carey's cigars and after a few puffs remarked:

"Say, that's a mighty fine cigar. I'll pay you for these five."

"Nothing doing," Carey smiled. "Accept them with Mr. Dorse's compliments."

The second customer received the same treatment, and to show their appreciation they each bought a box of another brand, and suggesting that Dorse get in some of Carey's stock.

When they had gone Dorse turned to Carey.

"Say," he said, "are you selling cigars or giving them away. You haven't peeped once about a sale."

"I didn't think I had to. Your two customers seemed to be giving my stuff a good recommendation."

"Do you know," Dorse said, "it's the first time I ever sold either one of those fellows more than three cigars at a time?"

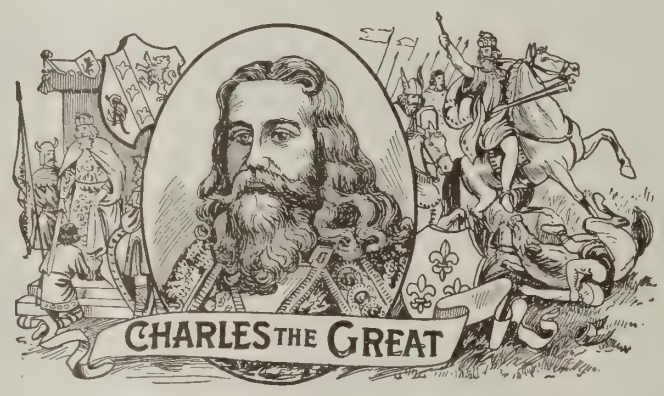
"Well, I'm glad to see you broke the ice."

"Put me down for 2,500 as a starter," said Dorse.

Later in the evening Carey ran into the other salesman.

"Say," the other salesman blurted, "that Dorse is the limit. If he was stuck in the clouds in an aeroplane you couldn't sell him enough wind to take him home."

"But I sold him a few," Carey smiled.



"You did? Well, you must have given them away."

"I did," Carey returned, and left the fellow in a deep study.

A small fire occurred in the cigar store of Getten & Wickham, at Omaha, Monday.

Remedio's Crop Will Exceed 350,000 Bales

It Is Predicted Now in Havana—And the Forecast of Quality Is Excellent—Continued Drought Discourages Any Hopes of a Great Yield in Vuelta Abajo—Semi Vuelta Prospects Not Much Better—Transactions on the Leaf Market—C. de Peso & Co. Ship 400,000 Packages of Picadura and 750,000 Cigars to France.

HAVANA, March 8.—The large factories are busy as heretofore, and smaller concerns are pegging away to meet the home demand. The raise in price on less preferred sizes has not affected business to any serious extent, although there may be a slight diminution in the demand for the time being.

The leaf market, during the last two weeks, has kept up its activity, the transactions chiefly concerned Vuelta Abajo factory vegas and some colas. Partido has been rather neglected, as local factories appear to have enough stocks on hand, and are able to await the arrival of the coming crop. It does not matter much now if the holders are disposed to make concessions to buyers, as intending purchasers are unwilling to stock up just at present, even at considerable concessions in price. Stocks of Remedios on the Havana market have dwindled down materially; no large deals could occur. The remnants of the 1917 growth will disappear before the new crop can reach market.

Drought in the Vuelta Abajo is unabated, and the season is now so far advanced there is no longer any hope, that even some good showers soon would improve the situation. The crop is bound to be very short of factory styles. Principal reliance must be placed upon those plantations, which by irrigation have insured a crop. Perhaps there may be a few vegas in isolated locations, which will yield fairly well. Semi Vuelta is in the same fix, although the deeper soil there preserves some humidity, the plants in that region will stand a longer drought successfully, and might be revived if it should rain soon.

Reports from Santa Clara province are extremely favorable. One reliable planter, packer and large buyer for American houses, says that the Remedios crop this year safely will amount to at least 350,000 bales, or considerably more than last year. The Oriente crop also will be very large, thanks to frequent rains. While leaf may not interest the American manufacturers at all, as it is usually used, to a large extent, by the numerous small factories for local consumption, as well as for export to Spain and other European countries, it will lessen the demand for Remedios from the above sources of competition. How the prices will rule this year, when the buying season commences in May or June, is an unsolved problem of course. Old hands at the business are naturally rather conservative. In the face of a big crop buyers will not participate in paying high prices to the vegueros, as they did last year, but as the competition, in making escogidas, may be tremendous, through the influx of a new element, consisting of the houses, which formerly confined themselves to the handling of Vuelta Abajo styles exclusively, there is no way of telling, how the ball may be rolling this year. The vegueros naturally are trying to make the best of the windfall, by asking the same figures as last year. However, the quality is pronounced to be far better than last year, and the cost of raising the plants, and completing the harvest, by paying very high wages to the laborers, must be taken into consideration by the coming buyers, as well as by the manufacturers later on. There will be also a large proportion of the light styles this year. They were absent almost entirely in 1917. And they can be used to advantage by the clear Havana cigar manufacturers in the United States, by blending them with Vuelta Abajo and Partido fillers. As Cuba has never produced two very large crops in succession, it is not likely that in 1919 we will have a repetition of a bountiful growth in the Santa Clara province.

Sales during the past fortnight totaled 8,894 bales, which were split up into: Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta, 6,434; Partido, 565, and Remedios, 1,895 bales.

Buyers were: Americans 1,091, exporters to Europe 240, shippers to South America 3,820, and our manufacturers of cigars and cigarettes 3,743 bales.

Exports per S.S. Morro Castle, February 23, 1918, totaled 415 cases, containing 1,991,554 cigars, which were consigned to the following countries, viz.: To Great Britain, 894,525; to United States, 765,904; to Australia, 142,500; to Canada, 126,700; to Argentine, 35,750; to Gibraltar 20,550, and to St. Thomas, W. I., 5,625 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco, from Havana, for the week ending February 23, 1918, totaled 4,982 bales, and which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: To all ports of the United States 3,621 bales, to Canada 126 bales, and to Argentine 1,235 bales.

A Touch of Suspicion in Philadelphia

Talk About a Trip to Atlantic City!

PHILADELPHIA, March 11.—Another o' them there rumors riz up in our midst during the latter part of last week, and when nobody took time off to scotch it the durn thing grew into abnormal proportions and started to become dangerous. Along about this writing the local newspapers are pottering around trying to find out whether this particular rumor is a gas bag or something real, so here's where we stick a coupling pin into it. The story was that the general increase in the prices of cigarettes, chewing and smoking tobacco and sich like was due to and caused by a meeting of jobbers said to have been held at Atlantic City. Of course there's no reason in the world why the jobbers of this man's town shouldn't meet at Atlantic City or Oshkosh or any place to which they can pay carfare, but by the time this rumor began developing the tale took on fancy aspects that would do credit to a Nick Carter. The meeting was given all the adjectival embellishments—nice line, that—such as "furtive" and "secret." Some of the purveyors of the yarn even went so far as to say that the jobbers got together at midnight to fix up a jump in prices.

But old In Quiry got on the job this week and soon discovered that the story, like a lot of other good yarns, was a durn fine story but unfortunately untrue. According to all the jobbers approached by In Quiry, there wasn't no such meeting, not by a darn sight. Also, the jobbers go further. Being in full possession of their normal senses and not under any pressure, they assert, declare and asseverate that they are not getting the advance which has now gone into effect at all centrally located stores with the exception of the big chains. The story had it that the jobbers got to figuring out all the money taken in by manufacturers in advances during the past year. Then, following the example of the retailer, they started to look into the costs of doing business, and found they had increased just about as much for the jobber as they had for the retailer. Of course the only answer, according to the story, was that they would have to get more money. The sad part of this yarn is that although the jobbers are getting more they are not. Which is to say that they're passing it all along. However, the idea has taken root among them and there is strong indication that if a sudden frost don't come along and spoil the little seeding it will grow into a little advance of jobbers' commissions. You never can tell in the present state of the market and general business.

At least one big cigar factory with headquarters in Philadelphia—that of Pent Brothers Co.—has decided that the nickel smoke and all the developments thereof has become too much like dynamite to fool with any longer. Result, the company has discontinued all of its widely known nickel brands and is now devoting itself altogether to the Don Digo list, selling for three for a quarter up. The only difficulty with this brand is that the manufacturers can't get enough workers to turn out the orders. That, however, is true of nearly every good seller on the market today in this district.

One result of the shortage in this part of the woods, and in all probability all over the country, has been an enormous increase in the output of Manila. Just to get a line on how the stuff was going we went around to see Daniel Leahy 8th and Sansom streets, who was two or three jumps ahead of everybody else when this product came on the American market duty free for the first time in the middle of 1910, and who has been pushing it ever since. Mr. Leahy, whose store is jammed to the roof with Manila smokes, has the thing figured out to mathematical nicety. But let him be heard:

"Domestic tobacco is expensive, and in most cases, poor," says he. "The Manila is already showing marked improvement over the first shipments to this country and even then it was better than almost any domestic leaf. This war is going to make definite changes in every line of business. Heretofore we've been able to produce an abundance of everything. But in the future, unless I am mistaken, we are going to be forced to get down to a basis of economical production, as well as consumption.

"I find that the rush is about starting. Dealers who would never handle the leaf before are now making inquiries. They find no difficulty in getting repeat sales once they induce customers to try out the smokes. I look to see enormous increases in the consumption of this product within the next year or two."

Max Gartman, who opened up a factory and retail store at the northeast corner of Seventh and Ranstead streets about eight months ago, has gone and closed it. He has left the city to take over the management of a large factory.

Duncan & Moorhead, jobbers and importers of fine cigars, find business all right except that salesmen are getting to be almost as scarce as delivered shipments.

Even the Independent Cigar Co., one of the price cutting stores in this city, is now selling Camels at 15 cents and other grades at corresponding figures. In this connection it is reported hereabouts that cigarette makers who changed the size of their packages are about to

When Express Charges Absorb Profits

Tampa Cigar Manufacturers Are Placed in an Unfavorable Situation Respecting Shipments—Road Bond Issue Held in Abeyance—Flag Raising at Ship Building Plant—Compliments for Vega and Foley—Bustillo Reports Fine Business—Frank Diaz Increases Success of La Mega.

TAMPA, March 9.—The railroad embargo affecting points east of the Mississippi River, in addition to working a hardship in the matter of shipping cigars to many important points, is having a similar effect upon the manufacturers who use shadegrown wrappers and Wisconsin binders in making their mixed cigars. The express companies are used to secure these materials, but the expense thereof, of course, proves to be a profit-robber. Demands for Tampa cigars continue to grow in volume, but to the above difficulties is added that of securing enough cigarmakers to meet the demands.

The people of Tampa were disappointed this week at the failure of a committee visiting Washington to secure permission from the war securities committee to sell the bond issue of $875,000, recently authorized by public vote for the purpose of building county connecting and other roads in Hillsborough County. Some of the principal roads of the county are in deplorable condition, there is no money with which to repair them, and months doubtless will elapse before sale of the bonds is allowed.

C. S. Keen, vice-president of the American Tobacco Co., was at the Tampa Bay Hotel, from New York, this week. Mr. Keen stated that he was always delighted at the privilege of visiting Tampa, and that conditions in the industries, considering adversities that have arisen, are better than had ben anticipated.

Celstino Vega, of Celestino Vega & Co., and "Mike" Foley, of the Lozano factory, are being complimented upon the manner in which they arranged for the recent cigar manufacturers' banquet in honor of T. Ed. Bryan, chairman of the manufacturers' bureau of the board of trade, Mayor D. B. McKay and L. P. Dickie. Jamie Pendas has received many compliments because of the eloquence of the tribute he paid the gentlemen mentioned.

The Oscar Daniels Co., of New York, which will use the plant of the Tampa Shipbuilding & Engineering Co., in building ten large steel steamships for the Government, prefaced the beginning of actual work yesterday by raising three American flags over the plant. The flag-raising was accompanied by impressive ceremonies. A decision of the labor adjustment bureau of the shipping board, announced this week, gives employes of the Tampa Shipbuilding & Engineering Co., additional back wages from November amounting to more than $30,000, and an increase which means an addition of $6,000 weekly to the payroll.

Moises Bustillo, of Moises Bustillo & Co., reports that business continues to increase at the "baby" factory. The Bustillos have met with marked success since they began manufacturing high-grade cigars in Tampa years ago.

Frank Diaz, upon whose shoulders the mantle of the late Vicente Guerra fell several years ago, continues to popularize La Mega and other V. Guerra, Diaz & Co. brands. Mr. Diaz is one of the most conscientious and hard-worked manufacturers in the city.

Jerome Regensburg states that the demand for Admirations is even greater than it was at the beginning of last year, in which the Regensburgs broke all former records by a wide margin.

week were Julius Klorfein, of New York; and Albert W. Kaffenburgh, of I. Kaffenburgh & Sons, and John J. Rodgers, of Breslin & Campbell, from Boston; U. A. Murdock, of Grosvenor, Nicholas & Co., Inc., the large cigar importers at New York, visited our manufacturers since last Friday, and leaves again to-day for New York, well satisfied with the attentions shown him on his maiden trip.

Romeo y Julieta raised their prices on the current low sizes of cigars, but did not alter the selling figures on the regalia vitolas.

Partagas also acted in the matter of raising prices, as this has become imperative, on account of the high cost of the raw material. Partagas is also very busy filling orders, as heretofore.

Punch is all right, as far as orders are concerned, for Great Britain and the American markets.

Hoyo de Monterrey is getting its full share business, at the present time.

Belinda is working along very steadily, upon fair orders from everywhere.

Por Larrañaga is still well supplied with British orders, way ahead.

La Corona, Henry Clay, Flor de J. S. Murias are busy, and so are Eden and Calixto Lopez, Ramon Allones, and El Rey del Mundo, C. del Peso & Co. are shipping 400,000 packages of Picadura to the Cuban Red Cross, and 750,000 cigars to the American Army in France, of their Flor de Tomas Guetierrez brand. A Craning of Necks in San Francisco

Caused by Ascending prices—Raises Reported on Various Brands of Cigars and Tobacco—Name of E. Golinsky & Co. Changed to E. Goss & Co.—Important Visitors Sojourning with the Trade on the Pacific Coast—Notes of Travelers and Other News Items.

San Francisco, March 6.—Prices of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco are still showing the upward tendency. The United Stores and other chain stores have announced an advance in prices in a number of lines, including the Dixie Queen, Tuxedo, Edgemont, Prince Albert, Velvet, Bull Durham, Five Bros., Union Leader and Camels. H. Bercovich & Co. announce the advance of H. B. Porto Rico, Tanton, Fumas, El Sidelo, Apex, Tanforan, Don Urban, Sam I. Davis, Cuban Tangress, Hoffman House and Telonetes. The United have posted notices that the new prices in tobacco will take effect on March 11, and the Bercovich Co. advances in cigars will become effective on the 15th inst. Notwithstanding these advances and others that are rumored, some of the dealers are annoyed because the United Stores and some independents refuse to advance the price on some of the cigarettes which are jobbed at $14 and $14.50 and which are being sold at 15 cents. They say that lack of co-operation will lead to disunity which will react upon the whole trade if not adjusted. Goods are still slow in getting through, but the main topic of talk this week has been on the advancing prices. The wholesale price of matches has advanced, and another form of smoke, the Virginia Cheroots, is now being sold 4 in a package for 10 cents instead of 5 as formerly. How the public will take to these increases, especially in smoking tobacco, will not develop until they have been tried out for a time.

The firm name of E. Goslinsky & Co. has been changed to E. Goss & Co. Mr. Goslinsky and his brother had their names changed legally some time ago, but the business was continued under the old title. The personnel of the company remains the same as formerly.

The Pow-Ha-Tan cigar, manufactured by the Pow-Ha-Tan Gordan Cigar Co., has entered the San Francisco market and will be handled in this territory by E. Goss & Co.

William Lineaweaver, representing the Hernsheim Co., and the Pow-Ha-Tan Gordan Co., both of New Orleans, and the Patterson Bros. Tobacco Co., of Richmond, is visiting San Francisco. Besides placing the Pow-Ha-Tan cigar with E. Goss & Co., he has placed large orders with Michilitshe Bros., who are featuring the King's Court 5 cent cigar manufactured by the Hernshiem Co., and with the William Cluff Co., who are making a leader of the Life Panetela. Cluff is heavily oversold and back ordered at the present time on this line.

Avah Smith, who has a retail store at 401 Fourteenth street, Oakland, has bought out the store of Tony Courant, 1601 San Pablo, in the same city, and will run both stores.

Briggs & Son have opened up a fine stand for cigars in the Fielding Hotel in this city.

Sam Israel reports that he has received several shipments of Copenhagen snuff, and that he is now catching up with back orders. This market was practically bare of Copenhagen a short time back.

A new cigar stand candy called "Free Lunch," that is something like a cross between a cracker and chocolate candy, is being manufactured by the California Candy Co. and distributed through Sam Israel. It is made of a grahan cracker with a chocolate cream filler.

The Little William Penn has arrived in a handy package of five to sell at a quarter.

"Mollie" Hull, of the General Cigar Co., is spending a few days in Los Angeles and will return next week to continue pushing the Tom Moore on this market.

H. L. Judell & Co. have a newly decorated auto delivery wagon. It is attractively painted with the 6 cent Tom Keene on one side and 10 cent and two for a quarter Tom Moore on the other.

Harry Sklute, of the Judell Co., has just returned to San Francisco after a very good week in San Jose with the T. & O. and Tom Keene.

Mannie Cohn is now in Nevada and is headed direct for Goldfield, where he always gets good results.

Rube Ellis, vice-president of the Tobacco Products Co., has been spending a week in San Francisco with the trade.

T. Masterson, a cigar dealer from San Mateo, and A. Zaic, of Crescent City, Cal., were in the city this week visiting old friends and laying in new stocks of smokes.

A. Dahlman, the William Demuth Co. pipe representative, arrived in San Francisco recently and is doing a good business here.

Monroe Falkenstein, vice-president of S. Bachman & Co., recently returned from a trip to the East. He has made a study of the cigar situation in the east and predicts higher prices all along the line for cigars in the near future.

George Leghorn, of the Morgan Cigar Co., of Tampa, makers of the Juan de Fuca cigar, has been stopping at the Palace Hotel in this city on his way from Tampa to Tacoma. He is accompanied by Mrs. Leghorn.

T. M. A. Bulletin

The T. M. A. is requested by the Post Office Department to place the following before the trade.

The necessity of expediting shipments of war material has resulted in a large reduction in the facilities available for the transportation of the mails. This, in connection with the normal increase in bulk mailings, has resulted in greatly overburdening the service during some portions of the day and delay and congestion at some points.

It appears that many business men and firms make a practice of holding almost all outgoing mail until the late afternoon or early evening hours, necessitating the handling of from 60 to 80 per cent. of all outgoing matter within a period of three or four hours.

Obviously it is of the utmost importance that letters be posted promptly to secure their dispatch on the first scheduled train, as failure to make a connection is now much more serious than in normal times and might result in a delay in delivery of 24 hours or more.

In view of this, the Post Office Department invites attention to the advisability of signing and preparing for dispatch all letters and other mail accumulating up to noon, and of mailing them at that time, and further requests that you adopt the practice of depositing your mail in the post office or street collection boxes not only earlier in the day, but as frequently as may be feasible. It would also tend to relieve congestion and facilitate the handling and dispatch of the mails if heavy mailers would make it a regular practice to have all letters and circular mail as well as catalogues, pamphlets, etc., bearing uncancelled stamps, properly faced for cancellation, with the short and long letters separated.

By complying with the above you would render considerable assistance to the Post Office Department in meeting the situation.

In order that the T. M. A. may be in a position to satisfy the Government of the wholehearted co-operation of the tobacco industry, it is desirable that members respond promptly to this bulletin, signifying their intention to comply.

SAN FRANCISCO NOTES

are big distributors of cigars, has recently had visits from three prominent members of the cigar trade. The first was Henry Erlich, of the Erlich Mfg. Co., makers of the Carabana and other brands of clear Havanas. Then came J. R. Saxman, western representative of Sanchez & Haya Co., and finally Oscar Banghart, of T. J. Dunn & Co.

Ralph Allen, who prior to joining the army, was with H. L. Judell & Co. for a couple of years, has recently been made acting sergeant at Camp Lewis.

"Redwood cigar box lumber, a new material for cigar box use, has recently been put on the market in the West," states Barrel and Box. "In the East this material has been thoroughly tried out for the past year and found very satisfactory, particularly as a substitute for veneered. The stock, which is of sawed lumber, is prepared in a special manner so as to produce uniform grain effect and color. Incidentally this special method of preparation eliminates almost entirely any tendency to shrink, swell or warp, and this feature will be readily appreciated by the cigar box trade. The supply of raw material is practically unlimited and the present manufacturing facilities are capable of producing upwards of a carload daily."

"Show the Real Man"

Leo M. Steele, of the Steele-Wedeles Co., of Chicago, says: "These times show the real man, spelled with a great big M. One who can look the situation squarely in the face, tighten his belt strap, take a long breath and go about his business hammer and tongs, in the face of all difficulties. The better posted a man is about general conditions, the more determined and progressive is his headway with his customers. This period and the time to come, until the note of peace be sounded, is the acid test of our manhood and womanhood. It is a case as always, of the survival of the fittest, not only among ourselves, but among the retailers likewise. It is no time for wringing our hands and blaming the other fellow, the house, the shipping facilities, cigar shortage, back orders or the scarcity of material.

"If we do, we shrivel up and die of dry rot or go to pieces, but when we individually, each and every one of us puts our shoulder to the wheel, and heave together with might and main with a determined grin and set teeth we cannot be denied. We will end up in the band wagon with that glorious banner set which spells victory. It will be a victory hallowed with tears and blood, but a victory from which a new and better order of things will arise."

Cleveland tobacconists are not agreed on the question of snuff. In the opinion of J. J. Fitzgerald, Superior Avenue, a snuff famine is near in Cleveland, as he is informed snuff users are trying at several cigar stores to get it and can't. On the other hand, M. Jaffa, Scranton road manufacturer of snuff, claims his factory can turn out two tons a month. And there you are.—Tobacco News.

The Wellington is made of genuine French Briar, seasoned by our own special process. It breaks-in sweet and mellow. The bowl is guaranteed against cracking or burning through. The "well" catches the moisture as well as all stray crumbs of tobacco. Any tobacco tastes better in a Wellington.

W. D. C. Advertising Campaign 1917-1918

W. D. C. advertisements are now appearing in "The Saturday Evening Post," "Literary Digest," "Collier's Weekly," Railroad Men's Magazine," "Country Gentleman," "Hoard's Dairyman," "Breeder's Gazette," "Army and Navy Journal," and in many college publications.

The campaign will run for nine whole months. Generous space is being used in all mediums—all half pages and quarter pages. More than four million people will read these W. D. C. advertisements in the magazines alone.

Another big Wellington advertising campaign is now running in the Canadian newspapers.

The pipes of all nations are introduced and illustrated in the magazine advertisements—the Peace Pipe of the Indian—the Hooka of the Turk—the old Church Warden of the pioneers—the Whalebone of the Esquimaux, etc.

Watch for these W.D.C. Welling ton advertisements in the magazines—cut them out and paste them in your windows.

Go over your stock and see that you have a full line of W. D. C. pipes—feature the Wellington in your counter displays—cash in on this big country-covering W. D. C. advertising campaign.

Don't let another season go by without carrying a full line of W. D. C. pipes—the Wellington in particular. Tie up with the largest pipe manufacturer in America and your pipe business will grow in a way you never thought possible.

Gladly will we send you further information on request.

MICHIGAN IN THE TOBACCO CENSUS.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—The Bureau of the Census has just published the completed figures for the State of Michigan for the Manufactures Census of 1914. Taking up tobacco manufactures the report says:

This industry reported 626 establishments, of which 609 manufactured cigars; 8, smoking tobacco; and 9, chewing tobacco and snuff. Cigars constituted 58.7 per cent of the value of the products for the entire industry. Although there was a decrease of 103 in the number of establishments in the industry from 1909 to 1914, the average number of wage earners increased from 7,876 to $9,075, or 15.2 per cent, and the value of products, from $16,178,533 to $20,667,016, or 27.7 per cent. The industry is centered in Detroit, where more than four-fifths of the total value of the products for the state were reported in 1914.

HELD BY THE FARMERS.

The Crop Reporting Board of the Bureau of Crop Estimates makes the following estimates from reports of its correspondents and agents:

The amount of corn on farms March 1, 1918, was about 1,292,905,000 bushels or 40.9 per cent of the 1917 crop, against 782,303,000 bushels or 30.5 per cent of the 1916 crop on farms March 1, 1917, and 1,116,559,000 bushels or 37.3 per cent of the 1915 crop on farms March 1, 1916. About 21.9 per cent of the crop will be shipped out of the counties where grown, against 17.6 per cent of the 1916 crop and 18.7 per cent of the 1915 crop so shipped. The proportion of the 1917 crop which is merchantable is about 60.3 per cent (equivalent to 1,905,723,000 bushels), against 83.9 per cent (2,154,487,000 bushels) of the 1916 crop and 71.1 per cent (2,127,965,000 bushels) of the 1915 crop.

The amount of wheat on farms March 1, 1918, was about 111,272,000 bushels or 17.1 per cent of the 1917 crop, against 100,650,000 bushels or 15.8 per cent of the 1916 crop on farms March 1, 1917, and 244,448,000 bushels or 23.8 per cent of the 1915 crop on farms March 1, 1916. About 51.2 per cent of the crop will be shipped out of the counties where gr against 56.7 per cent of the 1916 cro 61.7 per cent of the 1915 crop so shi

LABOR LAWS IN WAR'S CRUCI

"No one familiar with the tradit and the leadership of the Amer Federation of Labor will doubt trade unionism will be pushed forw by the war," declared Secretary J B. Andrews of the American Asso tion for Labor Legislation in an add on "Labor Laws in the Crucible" fore the National Institute of Sc Science, Saturday.

"Even though faced with peculiar ficulties, including the absorption of army of invading women and a of unskilled diluting mechanics, org ized labor was never in a more adv tageous position to assert its wishes to have its policies adopted."

In labor legislation prompt adop of a unified and adequate public ployment service, extension and provement of accident compensat and enactment of workmen's health surance were urged by Dr. Andrews immediate measures of labor constr tions "by which labor is to bec available and effective during the pr ress of the war, and by which la ultimately is to receive its democr reward for innumerable sacrifice b at home and abroad."

"While earnestly sifting new p posals for the after-war reconstruct period," he said, "no time should lost in putting these three well-tes measures into operation. Ours is work of construction. It is now a m ter of peculiarly vital importance to nation that this country catch up w the constructive labor legislation l since adopted in other countries."

Liability Not Reduced

The Effect of Government Control of Railroads on Shipper's Rights and Railroad's Liabilities

(Copyrighted, 1918, by Elton J. Buckley.)

CINCINNATI, Ohio.

ELTON J. BUCKLEY, Esq.:

Dear Sir—There has been a great deal of discussion among the members of our associa- tion recently over the effect which the taking over of the railroads by Mr. McAdoo will have on the rights of shippers and receivers of freight. No two opinions agree on the point and we think business interests generally are greatly confused about it and would like light. In our own case, we placed an order for goods in Chicago early last month, which was acknowledged and accepted by the manufac- turer, who has shipped the goods, but they have not arrived and a tracer put out by the railroad has not found them. They were sold f.o.b. Chicago. We expect that somebody, either our- selves or the manufacturer, must bring suit to recover for these goods if they do not appear, but we are uncertain whether to sue the United States Government or what to do about it, and our lawyer does not seem to be able to tell us. He wrote to Washington to get an opinion, but it has not come as yet.

A great many other members of our associa- tion also have claims against the railroad for lost or damaged goods, or overcharge of freights, but they are afraid to go ahead for fear that the money they spend will be wasted. We have been asked to write to you in the hope that you may be able to throw light on the point. If so, please accept our thanks in ad- vance. McINTYRE & BRO.

The taking over of the railroads by the Government did not change in any degree whatever the rights of shippers or the liabilities of the roads. As a matter of fact, the Government did not in the fullest sense, take the roads over at all. It merely started in to control them. Every liability that rested on a railroad before the Government took it over, rested on it afterward, and in precisely the same way. What is the liability of a railroad? It is to carry goods committed to it, to their destination properly, safely and within a reasonable time. If they are lost, or damaged or so unreasonably delayed that loss ensues, the railroad, if it can be shown to have been negligent, is responsible. But its responsibility is always limited—just as sharply limited as the railroad can make it—by the bill of lading.

All of the above is as true to-day as it was before the Government got into the matter. Any shipper whose goods are misused or lost by a railroad company should make claim and bring suit in precisely the same way as he would have done before, and against the same people. His case is determined by the bill of lading plus the facts, and the roads are using the same bills of lading that they have always used. I talked with eminent railroad counsel a day or two ago. The roads are taking the position that their legal status is unchanged, so far as liability to shippers is concerned, and are raising no technicalities whatever. So far as I have seen there has been but one exception to this: the case of a Southern railroad which when sued by a shipper for damages raised the point that as the railroads were now a United States agency, they could only be sued in the United States Courts. It has always been possible to sue a railroad in a State Court, or even in a small court like a magistrate's, alderman's or justice's court. The court decided against the contention and ruled that shippers could sue a railroad for damages in the same court as before, the Governmental taking over not having made any difference in this respect.

This reports the situation up to date. The roads would not be surprised to get some ruling from Washington changing the situation, but I cannot see how the Government could very well change the liability of the roads to shippers. Certainly it could not do it as to cases which have already arisen, and to do it with future cases would be a revolution. I do not expect anything like that to occur.

WINSTON-SALEM BREAKS RECORDS.

Tobacco in Winston-Salem has made a great record this season, both in the warehouses and the Internal Revenue office. From the opening of sales last August up to the first of March 28,323,844 pounds of tobacco was sold on the warehouse floors for an average of a little over 32 cents a pound, putting into producers' hands the splendid total of $9,244,754.19. For the entire offerings last season—17,694,178 pounds —the farmers received $2,157,174.37, an average of a fraction over 12 cents a pound.

During February the sales amounted to 2,090,279 pounds, for an average of 31½ cents a pound, making a total of $659,187.07 paid to growers.

Tobacco stamp sales at the Internal Revenue office in Winston amounted to $3,458,932.66 in February, which sets still higher the "record" monthly sales.

Spring Summons Prosperity to Chicago

And all Cigar Dealers are Keeping Busy

CHICAGO, March 8.—"Clean up Chicago; I'm on my way!" was the word Billy Sunday sent here this week. His campaign opens Sunday, March 10, and the liquor interests are in for a hard time, as the Spring election takes place April 4, when the city votes on the wet and dry question. Sunday is bound to stir up a lot of feeling against the wets.

William Rosobro, of M. Bustillo & Co.'s sales force, left for Tampa, to go over some very important deals he has on hand.

United Stores are displaying Condax signs on all their windows.

Fred Suss was here on his first visit this year. He found a lot of orders for the brands of R. Steinecke & Co., which house he has represented for many years.

Paramount signs have been painted above the windows of the Clayton Cigar Co.'s store at Jackson and Dearborn streets. Paramount is a new brand that the Clayton Co. will feature in all of its five stores.

Basil and Elias Condax, of E. A. Condax & Co., are making the rounds. The trade welcomes these old-time Chicago boys once more.

William J. Seidenberg, of Pancho, Arango & Co., came here to confer with William Waldman, of the sales force.

Another well known visitor to our city was Andy Anderson, the cigar manager of C. C. Taft Co., wholesale grocers and cigar jobbers of Des Moines.

L. Altman, of R. Gangemi & Co., did very well here. Lucella and La Diplomat brands are sold by some of the big Loop dealers.

Henry Hamann, general manager of Albert Breitung, left Monday for a business trip to New York. Mrs. Hamann will stop at the Hotel Astor.

Clark Cutler has already rounded up several fine orders for M. Bustillo & Co., which firm he connected with on March 1. "Cut" is a real hustler and he is showing the trade that he hasn't lost any of his old-time "pep."

R. J. Lytle, "Stogie Bob," is circulating around the Loop trade. He says stogies are hard to get and prices go up all the time.

"Americus" Patton came in from Minneapolis, and after spending a day here, left for the South. Patton says: "'Americus' are selling big in the Northwest." Francisco Torre & Cia have picked a winner in this brand.

Camels advanced again. Now cost the dealers $6 per thousand, and retail for 15 cents. The increased cost does not hold back the sale of Camel cigarettes.

Wengler & Mandell are displaying club quality little cigars in their window. They retail at 20 cents the package of 10.

George C. Knight shortly will put on the market a new 5-cent cigar under the title Cap and Gown. It will be made in Chicago by the Fromherz Cigar Co. and will go to the trade for $37.50.

Some new advances made during the past week were: Small packages of cigar clippings to 6 cents; 5-cent packages of Fashion, Barker, Central Union, Navy, Mascot and Eight Brothers, to 6 cents.

Walter Sloman is keeping busy in his new position boosting the Jose Vila and Glory brands of Berriman Bros.

The Pumpernickel Café, on Quincy Street, carries a big line of cigars. "Here you may find almost every popular brand."

I. R. Cohn, at 50 West Lake Street, is showing several sizes of Flor de Pindus cigars. They are made by the San Alto Cigar Co.

The Monroe Cigar Exchange, at 176 West Monroe Street, is now open. P. J. Bauer is the manager. The store will feature several brands from A. Rios & Co., local manufacturers, besides carrying a full line of call brands. Bauer will devote part of his time looking after Loop customers who handle El Talento brand.

"Economize! Buy Frat cigars by the can—5 4/10 cents that way; 25 for $1.35. Do it now!" That's the way the signs read at George C. Knight's retail store, corner of Randolph and Wabash avenues.

Six-cent cigars find it difficult to establish themselves in this market, and most all the leading dealers will shortly have on sale smaller sizes for 5 cents. The 7- and 11-cent sizes are also having a hard time getting started.

Dahlberg's drug store, 3458 North Halsted Street, was held up and touched for $50. Other druggists who had visits from bandits were J. O. McNulty, 6204 Cottage Grove; C. J. Snyder, 2459 South State Street; O. U. Sisson, 5034 Cottage Grove, and Kidder & Lewis, 1100 East 47th Street This has been a bad winter for the drug trade, so far as hold-up men were concerned.

Many Blanc & Co. have already started placing with the trade the Shrine brand of cigars. They are made in sizes ranging from 5 cents for Havana seconds, to the 3-for-50-cent Perfectos.

W. J. Clancy, a leading druggist, and a large handler of cigars at La Salle, Ill., called on the wholesale drug houses here. He says business is very good with him.

The "Robert Burns" roll of honor size sells well at 2 for 25 cents. They have a good distribution in the Loop.

At the Rookery building store of Albert Breitung, new signs of Murads, Helmars, London Life and Deities have been put up. They make a fine spring showing, being bright and attractive.

J. W. Plummer, one of the original members of the wholesale drug house of Plummer & Plummer, now Fuller-Morrison Co., died at the home of his son in Dixon, Ill., a few days ago.

Naturals, 10 in a box, are now sold for 18 cents. The package of 16 for 25 cents is displayed on the counters of most of the downtown stores.

McGinty & O'Brien, at 28 West Jackson Blvd., feature El Roi Tan and Pandora cigars. Glass signs are up on the front of this well known buffet featuring these two brands.

Ben Lesser, of the Havana Products Co., is still with us. He has been here now for twelve weeks, which is quite a stay for a cigar man. You can see him any day doing "sentry duty" on Michigan Avenue.

Ernest MacKenzie is at it once more, boosting the war recreation fund this time. Mac made a lot of dealers kick in to the cause. His order book for El Roi Tans is overflowing these days. He declares he "simply can't get enough cigars to fill the orders that are piling up."

The Irish Fellowship Club isn't going to buy any cigars or wines for its St. Patrick's Day banquet at the Hotel Sherman, on March 16. The money that would have been expended will buy smokes for the soldiers. "St. Pat and St. Patriot."

"Why pay the long price on cigars, when you can secure the best goods and lowest prices by co-operating with the Tampa-Cuba Cigar Co.?" That's the ad. which U. Geo. Fry, the Chicago distributor, puts out. His office is located at 421 West North Avenue.

Schulte's Little Fellows now sell 10 for 22 cents, and Havana Capitols have gone to 30 cents for the package of 10.

The Independent Drug Co. at its main store, 135 South State Street, has a big La Palina display. This brand is made by the Congr Cigar Co.

James Morrison, president of the wholes drug house of Fuller-Morrison Co., is in Flori on a vacation.

Fred H. Meyer has opened a drug store 811 and 813 West 12th Street. He will car a large line of smokes.

If Charles Chaplin has the exclusive right his brand of mustache, William H. White violating the law, and we are not sure that h is not doing so, anyway; for harken unto m curious ones, and keep mum. This adornme of Bill's is now out in full Spring bloom, ar is his claim of distinction that he belongs Charlie's class as far as mustaches go. Bill not a movie actor, but one of Chicago's fine cigar clerks, and has charge of the Stock E change cigar store at 40 North La Salle Stree

The Palmer House store of Best & Russe is showing Noo-Ga pleasant puffs of peace 10 for 25 cents. The New Robert Burns, lad dies' size, has proven a winner at this stor They are also packed 10 in a package and se for 25 cents.

The new Romeo-Garcia Blunts are now bein placed on the local market. They go to th trade at $37.50, and are made by Harris Schwarz Co., of New York.

Can you beat this in these days of hig prices? One of our leading department store has been selling the 6-cent size of John Ruski cigars at $2.10 a box of 50. This is less t the consumer than the retail dealer pays fo them.

The El Predomino Cigar Co. will shortl move their factory from 514 West Van Bure Street to larger quarters on Franklin Street near Randolph.

The Murad sales force has surely drumme the North Side trade. There is hardly a stor where you do not either see a Murad windo display or window strips put up. Murads ar big sellers up north.

Judge Henry Horner, of the Probate Court sent to the Desplaines Street station a 25-pound box of tobacco to be shipped to the nine members of the police force from that station who are now in France. The policemen of this station have formed a Good Fellowship Club to keep the nine comrades supplied with tobacco, and a box will be sent each week.

Thomas Murtaugh is the manager of Breitung's store, at 316 South Michigan Avenue. This store caters to the highest class trade in Chicago and Tommie knows how to handle the "swells."

The boys of the P. Lorillard Co., Chicago force, under H. A. Mackey, collected $54 for the Daily News tobacco fund for the "boys over there." The total contributed for this fund to date amounts to $16,341.89.

The Iroquis Club has purchased all the property, including the lease of the Mystic Athletic Club, at 26 North Dearborn Street. This clubhouse was formerly the home of the University Club, and later the Press Club. It embraces the upper six stories of the building, and the quarters will be ample for the accommodation of 2,000 members. It will be ready for use April 1.

WHY THE SUIT WAS DISMISSED.

A suit brought under the Sherman law against the American Tobacco Co. for $390,000 damages by the People's Tobacco Co., alleging unfair competition, was terminated March 4, by the United States Supreme Court. Disobedience of the dissolution decree of 1911 against the "tobacco trust" was alleged, but the court held that there had been failure to obtain service in this suit and that the Supreme Court decree had been obeyed by the American Tobacco Co.

Wisconsin Notes

EDGERTON, Wis., March 8.—A season of fogs has furnished the growers an opportunity to remove the last of their hanging tobacco during the week. As soon as stripping is completed the farmers will be able to make deliveries and count the proceeds of the crop. The deliveries have been liberal at most of the receiving points this week, but car shortage is still so acute that the movement from interior stations is greatly handicapped. There is also considerable complaint about the condition of the tobacco being delivered as more or less wet stems are found in nearly every crop. Adjustments, of course, are frequently made, though a few recent sales reported at top figures make it more difficult for packers to obtain such reductions as they think they are entitled to because of the defects mentioned. Some dealers put up with what they consider impositions rather than have an open ruction with the growers, while others release contracts as the safer method of guarding their rights.

Warehouse handling is proceeding slowly at the packing points as it is found to be slower work in grading the crop than usual because of the amount of throwouts, so the season is likely to extend into late spring.

Shipments to eastern points out of storage are again resumed in a moderate way.—Edgerton Reporter.

Suit for divorce and also an action for an accounting of the cigar business of her husband, Benjamin Lipschutz, was begun last week in the Common Pleas Court in Philadelphia by Mrs. Sarah Lipschutz, who recently obtained her release from the Friends' Asylum through the efforts of her son, Max Lipschutz. The grounds for the divorce are not disclosed. According to the husband, Mrs. Lipschutz was suffering from mental hallucinations and was confined in the Friends' institution. It was shown, however, at a recent hearing, that the woman was simply in a high nervous state, and within a comparatively recent time had engineered a $200,000 deal for the cigar firm, wrom which she was ousted when domestic difficulties arose.

*Net earnings after deducting all expenses, etc., and Federal taxes. After $600,000 preferred dividends, there was a balance of $1,613,755 available for the $10,000,000 common stock, equal to $16.14 a share, against $12.67 a share in 1916.

At the annual meeting of the American Cigar Co. retiring directors were re-elected.

A Soldier's Letter

GENTLEMEN: Your very neat and useful package was received by me on January 10 and my appreciation cannot be shown too much by any means. It was quite a surprise to the most of the company, myself included, and it was put to use right away, for we happened to be without "smokes" at the time.

I could not think of anything better than your "Fund." It is a great move and all of the boys are behind it. We all sincerely hope the people who have already taken part will not lose interest in it now and we also hope that more of the people will wake up and realize how much good this fund is doing for our soldiers and sailors of America both abroad and at home.

Regarding my experiences, I will tell all I am able. I have spent about four months in this country already, but I can't find any interest in it, in any way. In the first place I have not seen much, because I think I would rather spend my spare time right in camp.

When we first arrived here prices were rather moderate, but lately they have taken an awful jump. No American cigarettes or tobacco could be had, with the exception of "Bull Durham" which could be bought at the Y. M. C. A. for 20 cents a sack.

Coming back to the experience part I will change it a little. We are having a very stiff training, but it all comes easy. The country is very hilly and swept by the winds mostly all the time. We are having very frequent snow storms in the last months, but a good rain carries it all away. We are receiving instructions from the hands of French officers and we have surprised them more than once. The company has taken up machine gun, and bomb-throwing, and so forth. I have been training as a bomber and I can throw bombs with the best of them now. We are in the midst of a good healthy climate now and all are feeling in the best of spirits. It is kind of cold now, but when I think of the Old New England winters I make a big allowance.

I am,

GEO. E. MAHER,
Co. L, 101st U. S. Inf., A. E. F.

A. B. Dick, manager of "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" is receiving piles of letters from soldiers "over there." And each communication contains thanks for smokes. To keep up the work, more money is required. Help some.

Trade News from Near and Far

D. C. Alger has purchased the Abe Fuller igar store in Belvidere, Ill. The J. F. Rapel Co., a wholesale grocery house in Manitoc, Wis., has increased its capital to $250,000.

The theft of $150 worth of choice tobacco as reported to the police recently by Walter aville, proprietor of a cigar stand at the enance of the Dooly building, in Salt Lake City. he showcases were forced open and the robers made a careful selection of the choicest gars.

A new high record price for the year was reached on the Louisville tobacco market Tuesday, a week ago, when a hogshead of Burley leaf, shipped by L. Mussinon, of Bourbon County, sold at the Ninth Street House for $48.50 per 100 pounds. He had 12 hogsheads in all and the average was $35.33 per 100 pounds.

Tobacco buyers have been out in Henry County, Tenn., for several days buying leaf in considerable quantities, the prices ranging from 11 cents per pound up to 15 cents in some exceptional cases when the crop is especially good. It is estimated that the Henry County crop when marketed will bring between one and one-half million dollars.

While matches have advanced more than 200 per cent. within two years, they are still being vended from machines at a penny per box. At old prices every 45 cents invested brought a profit of 99 cents. This, however, was the one article a cigar retailer sold on which he made a big profit, and now this has gone, although the small volume of business in matches cuts little figure in a store's trade.

Dick Vance, a prominent farmer living near Hazel, Ky., has broken all records for the greatest amount of tobacco delivered to market in one day. Saturday he hauled off a portion of his crop, which he sold to the firm of Upchurch at Murray, for $1,576.65 for the day's delivery. That is not all of his tobacco by any means, for he has still more of the weed on hand, which he has sold for a higher price.

A change has been made in the ownership of the Central Cigar store in Hartford, F. M. LeCount having bought the half interest of his partner, A. E. Breitenfelt. Mr. LeCount has been conducting the store for the past two years, and recently he and Breitenfelt bought it from the Jenkins Cigar Co. LeCount is now the sole owner. The deal was made last Saturday. LeCount has not decided on just what name the store will bear hereafter.

The women of the Red Cross Association at Greeneville, Tenn., have adopted the plan of visiting the tobacco warehouses for the purpose of seeking contributions for the Red Cross Society, and have been very successful. One day last week they had a sale on the floors of the warehouses of the tobacco that had been contributed, and the sales amounted to more than $1,100. The sales of the season have not yet closed, and a considerable amount may yet come in to the Red Cross.

Sales of tobacco at Hopkinsville, Ky., were lighter Monday than for some time, being about 125,000 pounds. Also the offerings were confined to low to medium grades. Yet the market was very active, with a stronger tone to prices than even last week's high values. The high point for the day was $18.75, and minimum $11. According to grade, prices are regarded as showing a slight advance. The sale of tobacco donated to the Red Cross Chapter last week through the "give a bundle" proposition brought $146.37.

Mr. Studwell has been making a week end trip to Boston for the past few weeks.

The Whalen tobacco factory in Rochester, N. Y., totally destroyed by fire on February 27, will be rebuilt at once. The old Whalen building was erected more than fifty years ago by the late William Kidd, grandfather of Charles T. Chapin. Originally it had two stories. Three more floors were added in 1876. It was constructed of brick and extended back from Brown's race 185 feet. The office of the company is at 194 Mill Street, and is separate from the factory. Between the office and the factory and connected with the factory, but not with the office, is a one-story warehouse. The R. Whalen Co. took its name from the late Richard Whalen, father of Louis A. Whalen.

An estate estimated at more than $1,000,000 is disposed of under the will of George Arents, one of the founders of the American Tobacco Co., who died February 22 last, at 38 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York. Those who wear an air of leisure in New Jersey will do so at their peril, for municipalities on the far side of the Hudson have taken up the State's anti-loafing law in a serious way. The police of Jersey City were instructed Monday by Charles F. X. O'Brien, Director of Public Safety, to arrest every one who could not prove that he had a job.

About $15,000 was raised Sunday night at a benefit in the Hippodrome for the Army and Navy Athletic Fund of the New York Athletic Club. The hit of the show was a smart infantry drill by the Women's Motor Corps, led by Capt. Helen Russell Bastedo. "The Star Spangled Banner" and other compositions were played by Lieut. Sousa's massed bands from battleships and naval stations near New York.

Referee Lee Brock has completed winding up the affairs of the Independent Snuff Co., at Nashville, which some time ago filed a petition in bankruptcy. Creditors were paid 100 cents on the dollar, and stockholders are to receive a dividend of 7 per cent. on their shares in the defunct company. This dividend will be paid in a few days. Some time ago the plant was purchased by Leslie Check for $13,000 as an investment, and is being kept open and stock disposed of to advantage. A payment 100 cents on the dollar in bankruptcy is so thing unusual in such proceedings.

Hugh Campbell, president of the Uni States Tobacco Co., is named as defend to the suit entered in hustings court, p 2, at Richmond, Va., by Gilbert B. Llo a minor, who sues by his father, Jo A. The cases against twenty cigar dealers in Waterloo, Iowa, which were pending in Justice Wm. C. Cook's court were finally disposed of last week when the last dealer holding out appeared and paid his fine. The cases in question were associated with the illegal sale of cigarettes.

Thomas Dennen, former city sanitary inspector, has purchased of the William P. Cole estate the well known cigar and soda fountain business at the corner of Main and South Hamilton streets, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. This is one of the best known cigar stands in town. Mr. Dennen has conducted the business for Mrs. Cole since the dcath of her husband.

The Thompson Brothers' Cigar Co. has leased the lower floor of the Martin building at Second and Spring streets, Little Rock, Ark., formerly occupied by the Pugh Printing Company. The wholesale department of the Thompson Bros. Cigar Co. was formerly located at 216-18 Center street. Increasing business caused the company to secure larger quarters.

Directors of the Weyman-Bruton Co., tobacco manufacturers and dealers, have declared a stock dividend on the common stock, of which there is $4,600,000 now outstanding. This action was in line with recent disbursements by other important tobacco concerns, who stopped paying cash dividends in order to maintain a large working capital. In connection with the Weyman-Bruton distribution it was announced that no cash disbursement on the common stock would be made this year. The stock dividend is payable October 1, to stock of record September 16. Last year the company declared regular quarterly dividends of 3 per cent on the common, with an extra of 2 per cent, making an annual cash payment of 20 per cent.

Paul Jones has been chosen by the New York Chapter of the Navy Auxiliary as the name for the new officers' club at No. 24 West 57th street, New York. The enterprise has been undertaken with the view of providing a headquarters for officers of the army, navy and marines of the United States and Allied countries. It has been made possible through the generosity of William T. Eno, who placed the property at the disposal of Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, chairman of the board of managers of the club. A number of individuals and business firms have contributed toward furnishing and equipping the house with every requirement of an up-to-date club.

Directors of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 3 per cent. and an extra dividend of 2 per cent. on the common stock, payable in scrip dated April 1, with interest from that date to maturity at 6 per cent. The action was deemed advisable, the company announced, because "the demands of the growing business made it inexpedient at this time to pay dividends on the common stock in cash." The regular preferred dividend was announced and will be paid in cash.

Relatively little buying has been done this season in Paducah, Ky., although Paducah is one of the most important dark tobacco markets in the world. Most of the buying has been done in Marshall, Calloway and Graves counties. Deliveries have been delayed by the unprecedented weather and the bad condition of the roads. Only a small percentage of the crop has been sold. Prices in the Paducah market have been steady and lately have shown an increase. Medium and common grades in Marshall, Calloway, Graves and adjacent counties have been bringing from $14 to $16. In Paducah prices have ranged from $12 to $13.50 around for leaf and lugs. In a few instances prices have been higher. Buyers for export trade have displayed some activity. Higher prices for tobacco for England are expected before long.

BILL IN CONFERENCE.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—The urgent deficiency appropriation bill went to conference today with every indication pointing to early acceptance of House and Senate riders authorizing the sale of all enemy property in the United States, and government acquisition of the Hoboken piers of the North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American steamship lines.

The bill, which was passed by the Senate without a record vote, carries appropriations of $1,800,000,000, mainly for the army and navy. This total includes a Senate amendment increasing the House appropriations by $73,000,000.

Reimbursement to men and nurses in the military service for private property lost is provided in another amendment attached to the measure to expedite relief for men losing their effects in the sinking of the Tuscania.

THE BATTLE OVER BOOZE.

ALBANY, March 13.—In almost a hilarious mood, due to elation over the proof of sudden strength they developed in the Assembly late yesterday, the opponents of a bone dry New York are moving to the Senate battleground today.

The wet forces are preparing for still further conquests in the Senate, while the drys, ovbiously nonplussed by the heavy vote of 84 to 64 against legislative ratification of the federal prohibition amendment, are attempting to reorganize their forces to prevent further disasters on the floor of the upper house.

One such possible disaster is already broadly hinted at in the wet camp. It is a plan to have the Senate amend the Machold variant of the Hill-McNab prohibition resolution so that the test vote will occur in the general election of 1919 instead of the polls next November.

At present the question of a dry or wet New York is still before the Assembly. While the Machold amendment providing for a referendum instead of for direct ratification of the federal bill by the legislature was swept through decisively, the final draft of the Hill-McNab resolution is still to be voted upon. The wets are so confident of their power they claim this vote will be a mere formality.

The great issue of prohibition, foisted suddenly upon the legislature out of the welter of war, when the minds of the people were focused on other issues, brought into Albany at the last minute a wet campaigning army, the like of which has not been seen here in years.

SAVING TINFOIL.

A real war-time saving is that of tin foil and collapsible tin tubes in wide use for dentifrices, paints and other materials. This is saving without false economy—the regeneration of material which would otherwise be lost.

All tin foil and empty tubes should be made into a ball by the indivudual or family. It does not take long to accumulate a mass of this material of baseball size, and such a ball will often yield two pounds and upward of pure tin on melting.

It is estimated that the average family throws away at least one pound of tin annually, a national waste of 10,000 tons. In ordinary times the difficulty of gathering tin foil and like discarded material does not always justify conservation, as new tin is less expensive than the work of collecting from millions of individuals.

In war time, however, every pound of tin is urgently needed, regardless of the cost of collection, says the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette. Balls of tin foil gathered by the individual may be turned over to local charities for sale in bulk when sufficient has been accumulated. Tin foil saving is very effective when organized in hotels, clubs, and other places where cigars and cigarettes are sold, and where wastebaskets yield large quantities monthly.

AMERICA'S NEW CITIES.

Some idea of the vast extent of the work involved in building cantonments for the new national army is given in the following paragraph from Edward Hungerford's "The Camps of the First Half Million," in Everybody's:

"Sixteen new cities for America! Sixteen cities, each of the size of Easton, Pa., or Elmira, N. Y., or Kalamazoo, Mich.; each built to a definite and fairly common plan, and all completed within from 100 to 120 days. Here, then, was some slight measure of the problem:

"To measure it in still another way, consider the building of a community of wood equal in population to Cleveland or Pittsburgh or St. Louis; then the division of that great town into sixteen separate communities or cantonments—an average of one for each three states—and spread all the way across the face of the land from the commonwealth of Massachusetts to the state of Washington."

FEDERAL RESERVE REPORTS.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Industries nd general business are reported re-overing rapidly from winter fuel short-ges and sluggish transportation, the ederal Reserve Board's monthly sum-nary says. Business is concentrating n war objects, and the production of on-essentials is slowly decreasing.

Reports by districts as of February 23 how:

Richmond—Business and industry ac-ive, but limited by supplies and trans-portation simultaneously, much Govern-nent housing work, labor in demand, nd wages high.

Atlanta—Business good, industries ac-ive, but limited industries with the ex-eption of coal mining.

Dallas—Business good and Govern-ment construction active.

New York—Business improved, bank clearings lower than at same time last year, money rates firmer.

Philadelphia—General business condi-tions good, industries busy.

Chicago—Business good, industries ac-tive, bank clearings slightly decreased.

"FOUR-MINUTE MEN" AT WORK.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Twenty-five thousand Four-Minute Men will start out tomorrow on a Nation-wide cam-paign to impress upon the American public their patriotic duty to file their income tax return promptly and pay their taxes. The period for filing ends April 1. Taxpayers have seventeen days, not counting Sundays, in which to com-ply with this provision of the law. The penalty for failure is a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $1,000 and an additional assessment of 50 per cent of the amount due.

The Four-Minute Men will appear in theatres, moving picture houses and at public gatherings. Special meetings will be held by chambers of commerce, boards of trade, Rotary clubs, luncheon clubs and business organizations to hear the addresses. "Don't delay" is the warn-ing that will be given by the speakers. Taxpayers will be urged to protect them-selves and aid the Government by being prompt. It will cost the Government money and trouble to hunt down the man who dodges the income tax, but the word has gone forth from headquar-ters that this will be done. The "slacker" will receive no leniency.

GOVERNMENT LOANS TO FARMERS.

Nearly twelve million dollars was loaned out to farmers of the United States by the Federal land banks dur-ing the month of January last.

On February 1 the total amount loaned out to farmers by these banks since they were established was nearly $50,000,000, the number of loans closed being 24,000. The amount applied for at that date was $260,000,000, represent-ing over 100,000 applicants.

The total loans made by the various banks were as follows:

St. Paul	$9,760,400
Spokane	8,930,075
Wichita	8,643,200
Berkeley	3,666,600

switch back again, abandoning the 8 and 16 smoke sizes for the 10 and 20. One very important reason is that smokers seem to like the old standard sizes better. Such brands as Camels, Meccas, Tareyton, Chesterfield and Piedmont large are showing remarkable jumps in sales, according to the Independent company. This is confirmed by such dealers as Yahn & McDonnell.

The new United store at the northeast corner of Ninth and Walnut streets has been opened, lending a touch of new life to this ancient corner. It adjourns the Walnut street theatre, the oldest in America. Until a year ago an independent dealer ran a cigar store at this place for some years. He finally eased himself out and since then a jewelry shop has been in the place.

Vic Lopez, handling Garcia Grande, and Harry Nobel, disposing of Themalis Rose Tips, were recent visitors to the trade here. Both report continued demand all along the line, and tell the same old story about delayed shipments.

A local dealer who requested that his name be not used is authority for the statement that ladies who smoke are getting tired of cigarettes, and that almost any time now they may be expected to swing over to cigars—perhaps even to pipes. This is offered without charge as a free tip to some enterprising young manufacturer. Put out a special ladies' brand and start the ball rolling.

Showell & Fryer, importers, of 1517 Chestnut street, are making a special drive on "1517" their own nickel brand. They report exceptional success with Manila smokers retailing at 7 for 25 cents which they have been handling for some time.

Just by way of getting a few details in we rambled around to the U. S. District Court this week to see some of the papers in the bankruptcy case of J. J. Corcoran, noted in the newspapers as that of a cigar dealer. The schedules show that at the time he decided to give up the firm of A. Diaz and J. J. Corcoran Cigar Co. and be purged of his debts in the dear old courts, he had a stock of cigars and cigarettes worth exactly ten beans—yet, only $10. Creditors include A. Frank, New York, $9.50; Ventura Blanco, of this city, cigar manufacturer, $69.50, and a few people here and there who lent money to the firm. The bright spot in the whole proceeding is that this Corcoran person got into a coal dealer for $16.70, and a plumber for $1.50. Fawncy anybody getting ahead of a coal dealer.

The local association met on Tuesday night of this week for another of its justly popular bimonthly sessions, unfortunately too late for publication in this issue. A whole gob of important things are to be up for discussion, as for instance the resale price movement, on which a committee was appointed at the last meeting. As usual, there will be a buffet lunch. Traveling men who haven't heard about it may be interested to know that the association is composed of generous souls who like to have visiting members of the trade come around and watch the newest and liveliest retail organization in the country doing business. Yes, the visitors are turned loose on the aforesaid buffet lunch.

Every big hotel in the city and a lot of small saloonkeepers who have branched out for some of the easy money within the last year or two, since war babies started to grow fat, will be hit by the ruling of the local License Court this week, not yet made definite but positively indicated by statements from the bench, that dancing where liquor is being sold has got to stop. In this connection a hot fight is under way to deprive the old Continental Hotel of its license on charges that it sold to minors.

PROGRESS OF WAR SAVINGS CAMPAIGN.

The receipts of the treasury department through the sales of War Savings and Thrift Stamps through February, have equalled $75,000,000. The receipts for the month of February totalled $41,000,000, as against $37,000,000 received through the War Savir campaign in England for the same peri despite the fact that the campaign has be running there for over two years.

The receipts are coming in to the treasu department at the rate of about $2,000,00 day. In other words, the receipts in t country, after three months, are alrea running at the same rate which England h reached after two years.

The total receipts in England up to Jan ary 26, 1918, were $550,000,000. At the ra at which the campaign is running here, shall reach this total inside of the year lowed by Congress for the present campaig If the rate continues to increase as it h been increasing during the past month, the should be no difficulty in attaining the $ 000,000,000 goal set by Congress for t year's campaign.

It should be borne in mind that this mon represents the residue after two intensi Liberty Loan drives and after the consta appeals for charity which have been ma to the people of this country since the b ginning of the war. The present rate return from the sale of stamps is equal the entire daily cost of running the gover ment ten years ago. It is in excess of t highest rate of growth ever reached by t savings bank in this country. It is doub the total daily receipts of the post offi department and double the customs receip before the war. It is in excess of the tot interest payments to holders of railroa bonds and in excess of the average new ca ital expenditures for railroad developmen

If the campaign attains the goal set, will cover the entire cost of the gover ment's ship building programme for the yea Already the government is receiving fro the buyers of War Savings Stamps dail enough money to build more than 10,000 to of shipping. It has received, to date, fund for the building of 420,000 tons or 84 ship of 5,000 tons each.

By Ralph Barton Perry of the Vigilante.

It is now regarded in some quarters as evidence of intellectual advancement to smile condescendingly at those who declaim about patriotism, liberty, fraternity and equality. But never before have these things possessed so much substance and so much truth as to-day. Liberty as self-government, as willing submission to self-imposed law and to beneficent institutions, is more clearly than ever the only escape from the opposite calamities of license and tyranny. Fraternity, or the sense of fellowship and mutual dependence, is the only thing which can save our human relations from the meanness of obsequiousness and from the hatefulness of arrogance. Equality, the recognition of the common lot and the common humanity, the wide-open door of opportunity, remains the only gospel by which men may be saved from the bitterness of undeserved failure or the false pride of undeserved success. These are more than ever the precious things, the things worth living and dying for, things we love and call American; and patriotism is more assuredly than ever the most powerful force by which they may be kept alive and safe in the world.

Don't Fail to Make Reports

WASHINGTON, March 20.—Tax slackers who fail to file their income tax report by April 1 will be prosecuted vigorously.

Action will be taken under the war revenue act, according to Commissioner Roper.

Revenue officers in every section of the country are checking up returns with a view to beginning prosecutions against tax dodgers.

"Through its educational campaign the bureau of internal revenue has endeavored to cover the field so thoroughly that ignorance of the law cannot be consistently offered as an excuse," said Commissioner Roper.

"The man who failed to register under the selective service act was regarded by the War department as a slacker and prosecuted as such.

"The man who fails to file his income tax will be regarded as a 'money slacker,' and when discovered, as he will be, will be made to suffer full penalties of the law.

"To the credit of the nation, it may be said that I have gratifying and conclusive evidence that these income taxes will be paid by the great majority of the American people cheerfully and willingly.

"They do it as a patriotic duty.

"But the duty of the honest man does not end with the payment of his own tax. I call upon him to aid in bringing into camp the tax dodger.

"A man so niggardly as to seek to evade what his representatives in Congress have declared to be his just share of a tax imposed for the support of our arms is deserving of no consideration and will receive none."

The taxes sure will be collected.

Tobacco Trade Ready to Prove Its Patriotism

Every Subscription Possible Will Be Procured for the Third Liberty Loan—"Over the Counter" in 2,300 Cigar Stores in Greater New York—Wise Is Chairman and Dushkind Is Secretary of the Strong Committee That Represents the Oldest American Industry—Planning an Intensive Canvass

Subscriptions to the Third Liberty Loan will be taken "over the counter" in 2,300 retail cigar stores in Greater New York when the campaign to sell the new issue of war bonds starts. This arrangement has been effected as part of the plan of the Tobacco Trade Committee for the Metropolitan district to push the sale of Liberty Bonds as vigorously as possible.

The tobacco trade itself will be canvassed intensively. The committee will appoint forty teams, each in charge of a captain, and each team will be assigned to cover a district with instructions to see that subscriptions are personally solicited from every person in any way affiliated with the tobacco industry.

Shop meetings will be held in the big factories at lunch time throughout the campaign, with a view of stimulating sales of Liberty Bonds among the workers. There are about 20 large cigar and tobacco factories in Greater New York, employing about 10,000 men and women. All the large manufacturers have agreed to finance subscriptions for their employes, thus mking it possible for them to pay for the bonds on easy instalments.

Subscriptions received from the tobacco trade during the last Liberty Loan campaign were largely in excess of its quota, and members of the committee express the belief that an equally good showing will be made this time.

Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Company, is chairman of the committee, and Charles Dushkind secretary. Other members are: Frederick Hirschorn, president General Cigar Co.; Julius Lichtenstein, president American Sumatra Tobacco Co.; John Bain, Jr., The Conley Foil Co.; Joseph F. "A BIG TOBACCO FENCE"

That's What Oscar F. Flensburg Is Called by Kansas City Policemen—Search of Store Reveals Goods Stolen from Parker-Gordon Cigar Co.

Oscar F. Flensburg, owner of a cigar and confectionery store at 17 West Missouri avenue, Kansas City, was arrested by Kansas City policemen, who say that they have suspected him for some time. Flensburg is accused of being a "tobacco fence."

When the police searched Flensburg's store, following the arrest, they found cigars and tobacco valued at $30,000. An investigation is being made to establish ownership. Flensburg says he obtained his cigars mostly from persons living in Oklahoma. However, the police declare he has bills of sale for only about 25 per cent of the goods.

The Parker-Gordon Cigar Co. has identified cigars and tobacco valued at $800 found in the store.

The police began an investigation after they had been told how a transfer wagon and team had been abandoned in the alley at the rear of the New Nelson building. About $1.500 worth of tobacco and cigars comprised the load on the wagon.

From the owner of the team it was learned the negro driver had started for the Union Station with tobacco and cigars belonging to the Kingsbaker Cigar Co. The goods were valued at $2,100.

The negro driver said that he was stopped by another negro near Seventh street and Baltimore avenue and induced to leave his team. When the driver returned, the team and wagon were gone.

A search of the Flensburg store resulted in finding two of the cases of cigars, one of which had been opened. The cases were identified as part of the $600 in goods missing from the transfer wagon. Flensburg said a negro had attempted to sell him the two cases of cigars, but he had refused to buy them.

The Parker-Gordon Cigar Co. was robbed, two months ago, and of late other stores in Kansas City have reported important thefts of cigars and tobacco.

REBATE FOR WAITT & BOND, INC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18.—Announcement has been made at the Treasury Department that allowance of drawback will be made on "Blackstone" brand cigars manufactured by Waitt & Bond, Inc., of Boston, in part with the use of imported Sumatra wrapper tobacco and Habana filler tobacco.

A manufacturing record is to be kept, showing, in the case of each lot of cigars manufactured for exportation with benefit of drawback, the lot number and date of manufacture thereof, the quantity, value and identity of each kind of imported tobacco together with the quantity of domestic tobacco used, the number and weight of cigars produced, and the quantity and value of each kind of waste resulting.

The quantity of imported tobacco which may be used may be taken as a basis for liquidation, and shall not exceed the quantity used in the manufacture of the exported cigars, as shown by the extract from manufacturing records, the allowance to be reduced according to the quantity of imported tobacco which the value of the waste will replace, the waste known as "tucks" to be treated as entirely of imported Sumatra wrapper tobacco.

THE VUELTA ABAJO CROP

Because of the Persistent Drouth Will Be Less Than 25 Per Cent. of the Normal Yield—Maximillian Stern's Estimate.

In previous reports the injury done to the tobacco crop by prolonged drouth in the Vuelta Abajo region has not been overstated. On the contrary, hope, entertained until a late day, postponed an exposure of things as they actually were.

Not realizing how dry the season was, many prospective purchasers of tobacco continued to place dependence on irrigation. They knew that systems had been established, whereby certain areas might be irrigated. But when some of the streams went dry, where could be obtained the water necessary to secure a crop?

Because of the failure of streams it was impossible to irrigate fields, that had been made to yield much in other years.

So, the drouth reduced the crop in the Vuelta Abajo district to something less than 25 per cent. of the yield in normal years.

Maximillian Stern, pre-eminent among large dealers in Havana leaf, returned to New York from Cuba recently, and his estimate is that the Vuelta Abajo harvest will be not quite 25 per cent. of an average crop.

In Remedios, a higher percentage may be expected. And, in quality, at least, "Remedios will be good, this year."

DAYLIGHT SAVINGS BILL BECOMES LAW.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—President Wilson this afternoon signed the Daylight Saving bill, a measure that it is expected to conserve many millions of dollars and accelerate the preparations for war. No ceremonies of any kind attended the final act that lines the United States up with practically all the European nations in inducing mankind to utilize an hour of daylight more throughout the summer.

Under operation of the law all clocks in the country will be set forward an hour at 2 a. m. on March 31. At the end of October they will be turned back one hour.

PROHIBITION FIGHT DEFERRED.

ALBANY, March 19.—After certain Assemblymen had spent the greater part of the forenoon in denouncing the Anti-Saloon League, Assemblyman McNab, sponsor for the Hill-McNab federal prohibition amendment, agreed to postpone consideration of the Machold amendments to the measure until next week. An agreement was later reached by the Republican and Democratic leaders to indefinitely put off action.

A SCENE THAT EVOKES ADMIRATION—FILMED BY LASKY

In Los Angeles, where "moving picture actors" comprise a conspicuous part of the population, assuredly there is a demand for Admiration. The very name of the popular mild cigar made by E. Regensburg & Sons ever bespeaks what film heroes most crave. The Klingenstein Co., which distributes the Admiration and the American brand in Los Angeles, consequently is doing a great business. Artists "constantly achieving tremendous success," are not relegated to the background when the camera commences to click. Hence here appears a picture that is more than a film "feature." It is a scene depicted in a recent Jesse Lasky triumph.

The Slogan of the T. M. A. Is "Win the War"

Patriotic Work Urged Continously by President Eisenlohr

Charles J. Eisenlohr, president of the T. M. A., issues his first official letter, as follows: "Having been honored by election to the presidency of the Tobacco Merchants Association of the U. S., I have assumed the duties of that office not only with a feeling of confidence that the Association will continue to receive the whole-hearted support of the tobacco industry, but with an intense desire to utilize to the fullest extent the splendid machinery of the T. M. A. organization in aid of the prosecution of the war.

"I feel that I am expressing the views of the entire tobacco industry in stating that, urgent and imperative as it may be for our Association to deal with the many trade problems and difficulties that our industry is replete with, in times like this all selfish interests and all business advantages should be subordinated to the fealty and loyalty that we owe our country. For, engaged as we are in tihs terrible world war for liberty and democracy, we whose good fortune it is to be thousands of miles from the firing lines, should exert every effort aand apply all our energy to aid and assist in bringing closer the day when victory shall be ours.

"I therefore feel certain that in making the slogan of this Association in the present crisis of our country "The Winning of the War," the entire industry will join with us in bending every effort to an early, complete aand victorious ending of the war.

"It is for us, the non-combatants, necessary cogs, as we are in the machinery of warfare, to do our bit, so that the brave boys at the front who are so valiantly giving their all to protect and uphold the honor and integrity of this country, shall not find themselves unsupported and unbacked by the host of non-fighters at home.

"We can indeed serve our country in this crisis in many different ways. We can invest our unemployed capital in Liberty Bonds, stimulate the sale of War Savings Stamps, help the Red Cross and other movements calculated to make the boys in the trenches a little happier and more comfortable. We can and should cut out all waste and economize in the use of such commodities as may be essential to the prosecution of the war. In other words, we must all make a supreme effort to serve our country to our utmost ability.

"If we in the tobacco industry have done and shall do this, then when the dawning day of peace arrives and the dark clouds of this world cataclysm are dispelled, it cannot be said that in this, the most trying ordeal and dire period in our country's history, the tobacco industry and its constituents were found wanting.

"Our Association has an able and representative executive committee, under the guidance and advice of a board of directors, composed of men who by their achievements have attained leadership in the industry; and, needless to say, their whole-hearted support will be continued in the future as it has been ably and unselfishly extended in the past. But, in addition to this, our organization must have the co-operation, interest, enthusiasm and assistance of its individual members.

"Every branch of the tobacco industry is represented in the Tobacco Merchants Association by committees that are equipped by experience and ability to perform their duties, and I earnestly request that members report freely to the Association all matters that may properly come within its functions. It is only by so doing that the Association can render effective service to its members.

"During the period of the war, many difficult and serious problems may confront our industry, and it is incumbent upon us as an Association, and as individual members, to consider these subjects broad-mindedly in the interest of our government, and to lend our best efforts in a constructive way.

"All phases of the tobacco industry are facing unusual conditions, requiring drastic changes and readjustments. Satisfactory solution cannot be worked out over night, but I am confident that by close co-operation on the part of members, committees and executives, our problems can be successfully solved.

"To this end I pledge my constant and most sincere support.

CHARLES J. EISENLOHR,
"President."

Tobacco Companies Conserve Cash Resources

Tobacco companies, classified among the most liberal dividend payers of the industrial concerns of this country, are showing a disposition to conserve their cash. "This conservation of resources," the Wall Street Journal remarks, "is making itself felt in the distribution of scrip dividends, redeemable, in most instances, in two to three years. Action along these lines permits the companies to build up a larger working capital."

Increased costs of raw materials have been fully as pronounced in the tobacco industry as in any other industrial line. Leaf costs have advanced in the neighborhood of 100%, as compared with a year ago, and there is no indication of any slowing down. In fact, the opinion is entertained by leading tobacco men that the period of high costs will continue for at least a year after the cessation of hostilities.

The American Tobacco Co. was the first to start the cash conservation plan. This company, after borrowing $25,000,000, announced that for a limited period, scrip dividends would be paid. The initial disbursement in scrip is payable this month. Scrip dividends mean a conserving of $8,000,000 a year to the company, and with a steady increase in earnings, together with the issuance of a limited amount of B common stock in 1920, the company will be in a position to take care of its financing at maturity.

The P. Lorillard Co., the largest manufacturer of Turkish cigarettes in this country, will distribute a stock dividend within the next few weeks, in lieu of the usual extra cash dividend due at this time. This stock dividend will amount to 20% and it is understood that the usual cash rate of 12% will be maintained on all the common stock.

The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. will also pay scrip dividends in April, instead of cash distribution. These scrip dividends will be the regular 3% and an extra of 2%. The American Tobacco Co., the Lorillard Co., and the R. J. Reynolds Co. represent three of the four large parts into which the old American Tobacco Co. was divided.

The other large part is the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., which has shown no disposition as yet to pay other than cash to its stockholders. This may be accounted for by the fact that a little over a year ago the company sold some preferred stock, which put its working capital in excellent shape. Incidentally the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. has been extremely conservative in its payments.

The Weyman Bruton Co., one of the three parts into which the old American Snuff Co. was divided, will also conserve its cash. This company has announced a scrip dividend of 20%, which will take the place of cash dividends during the next year. The regular cash rate has been unusually liberal with its distribution of "extras." It is announced that the company intends to resume cash dividends at the start of 1919.

LAW IN NEW JERSEY

Elucidated in a Suit Brought by the Metropolitan Tobacco Co.—Damages Amounting to $1,500 Were Claimed.

In the Supreme Court, in Jersey City last week, before Judge William H. Speer, was brought the suit of the Metropolitan Tobacco Co. to recover $1,500 damages from Oscar O. Lauchner, of West Hoboken, and Adolph Schlegel, of Union Hill, individually and as executors of the estate of Charles Meyer, late of Union Hill, and, in the alternative, Mary Fitzpatrick, of Union Hill.

According to the complaint, the Metropolitan Tobacco Co. ordered a bill of goods from Charles Meyer, who, before his death on January 14, 1916, did business in Union Hill under the name of Charles Meyer & Co., but these goods were not delivered and the plaintiff was compelled to purchase the same kind of goods in the open market at a price far in excess of the figure agreed upon with Meyer.

The defense was a general denial by all the defendants of having received the order, and the contention was raised that, as the plaintiff is a corporation of the State of New York and never filed a certificate in New Jersey, as required by law, and therefore they could legally do no business in the State of New Jersey, and consequently were without standing to prosecute this action in the court.

A non-suit was allowed as to Lauchner and Schlegel, while the jury found a verdict in favor of the remaining defendant, Mary Fitzpatrick.

SQUELCH SUCH PESSIMISTS

"We hear a great deal today of 'morale,'" says the Tampa Tribune.

"It is generally recognized that if one can destroy the morale of his opponent—demoralize him—he has won the victory.

"In pithy American slang, 'Get his goat and he is yours.'

"And there seems to be quite a few of these professional 'goat-getters' abroad. And the virus they are spreading is pessimism.

"They are to be told by their crepe-hanging words and actions. They deplore the necessity that drives us poor mortals to have 'meatless,' 'wheatless' and 'porkless' days.

"Of course they 'stand behind the government.' That is the evil of it—they stand so far behind; they are merely trailers.

"They submit to these things, they subscribe to the various loans and organizations, like martyrs—which they believe they are.

"And they go about talking about this awful war and how it entails 'giving until it pinches.'

"God save us from these pessimists! Preserve us from these crepe-hangers!

"Why, we don't know what sacrifice means, compared with our associates in this war. Some of us have not yet arrived at the point where we can enjoy to the full the sensation of giving.

"It is time for us to lay aside the sackcloth and ashes and kick pessimism outdoors.

"We have boys at the front and others ready and training to go. We have got to back them up, be optimistic, make them feel that behind them is the most powerful, the richest, the finest nation in the world.

"The spirit at home is the spirit at the front.

"'Morale' here means 'morale'—and victory over there."

THE GREAT DUTY.

As we go about our daily tasks in peace and safety men are dying every minute on the battlefields of Europe to save civilization. Our own gallant soldiers are shedding their blood in France and our sailors engulfed in the waters of the Atlantic as they go in defense of America's rights and honor.

Upon our performance of the work committed to us depend the lives of thousands of men and women, the fate of many nations, the preservation of civilization and humanity itself; and the more efficient and prompt we people of America are in doing our part, the more quickly will this war come to an end and the greater the number of our soldiers and sailors who will be saved from death and suffering and the greater number of the people of other nations released from bondage and saved from death.

To work, to save, to economize, to give financial support to the Government is a duty of the Nation and to the world and it is especially a duty to our fighting men who on land and sea are offering their lives for their country and their countrymen.

ANTI-LOAFING LEGISLATION.

New York State follows New Jersey in the introduction of anti-loafing legislation that is designed to utilize the full man power of the State and at the same time rid the community of a worthless element in its composition.

The bill provides that all able bodied men, between the ages of 18 and 50, be employed at some useful occupation. The jobless must register at the agencies of the State Industrial Commission, and power is vested in sheriffs and police officers to arrest unemployed men not so registered.

It is not clear just how the law would work out in actual operation. A wide difference of opinion is bound to ensue on what may be a "useful occupation." Furthermore, the class of men who would habitually loaf during a national crisis like the present would, perhaps, as soon go to jail as not. Care would also have to be taken to prevent the abuse of the proposed law by draft dodgers.

Neverthless, the cessation of immigration, the migration of alien reservists and the enlistment of thousands of New York boys make it a moral, if not a legal offence, for a man who can work, to be idle now.—The Evening Sun.

THE LIBERTY LOAN HONOR FLAG.

A new and distinctive feature will be introduced in the Third Liberty Loan campaign, and every city or town in the country which subscribes more than its quota of Liberty Bonds will be awarded by the Treasury Department an Honor Flag.

The flag will be 36 inches wide and 54 inches long. The body of the flag will be white with a broad red border, and three broad blue vertical stripes denoting the Third Loan. The flags, which will be of the same quality as the flags of the Navy, are already being manufactured and will be awarded as fast as the right to fly them is won. Though awarded by the Treasury Department, they will be distributed by the Liberty Loan committees of the different districts.

There will also be a National Honor Flag for each State, to be flown at the State capitol, with the name of each town winning a flag inscribed upon it. There will be also preserved in the United States Treasury a National Honor Flag, with the record of each State recorded on it.

Stars, to be placed on the flag of each city or town doubling its quota, will be also awarded, and an additional star for each time the quota is doubled.

An Honor Roll, containing the names of all subscribers, but not the amount of the individual subscriptions, will be kept in each community.

SOLDIERS' LETTERS

DEAR SIRS: Received a box of tobacco through your fund and I want to thank you for it. I can assure you that all the boys appreciated the "smokes" very much as they are very hard to get over here.

The town I am in is a little place built a hundred years ago and has only two cafes which don't sell much of anything and no tobacco. The only way to go anywhere is to walk as there is no means of transportation. The Y. M. C. A. sell tobacco but only allow so much to each man. We received your tobacco on New Year's morning, which is a holiday for the boys, and everyone started the year right by being happy.

Thanking you again, I am,

PRIVATE HERMAN SINGER,
Co. A, 104th Inf., A. E. F., care New York Postmaster.

FRIENDS: I received a contribution of tobacco from Mrs. Harry Schilling, of Park, Wash., and have sent my sincere thanks to them. I think the idea you are carrying on is the best ever. I tried while in the city to buy some American tobacco but was disappointed and had to buy tobacco greatly inferior to the good old U. S. A. tobacco. While we are so far from home it is very gratifying to know that our friends at home are trying hard to do all they can to help and comfort us, and after a hard day's drill it is comforting to sit down and smoke some real tobacco. Thanking everyone for their thoughtfulness, I remain,

SGT. W. G. SAUNDERS,
Co. C, 104th Inf., A. E. F.

OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND: Just a few lines, friends, to let you know I received your package of tobacco. Let me thank you for the good old American smokes. We are issued a ration of English tobacco each week, but its "no-bon"—as the French say.

This regiment are at present attached to the English army. We are operating a narrow gauge road that supplies the men in the lines and the batteries with food and ammunition. For power we have small Baldwin engines that weigh about 20 tons. Also tractors that are used at night to take the cars to the front. Thanking you again for that nice tobacco, I remain,

PRIVATE HAROLD KNAPP,
Co. D, 14th Engrs. (Ry.), A. E. F.

GENTLEMEN: Just a few lines letting you know that we received the tobacco and cigarettes that you sent to the boys over here and we can't thank you enough for these. It is very hard to put into words our appreciation of the gift as good old American tobacco and cigarettes are very scarce "over here" and we promise never to forget "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund,"

CORP. JAMES W. POST,
Co. C, 102nd U. S. Inf., A. E. F., via New York.

DEAR FRIENDS: I was today a recipient of one of your "boxes of cheer" and believe me, it did cheer me and all the boys who received them. We are in a section where we have difficulty in getting American tobacco. I can't tell of many experiences as we have not completed our training yet. Our regiment is made up of old Massachusetts Militia Regiments. I am an Old Sixth Mass. man. Our trip across was quite uneventful. Some of the boys had a touch of seasickness. We did not see any submarines although guards and lookouts were posted night and day.

We landed in England before coming to France. We spent a few days there and then came across the Channel to France.

We are now billeted in an old French town about thirty miles from the front. We are drilling fairly hard and expect to see service soon. I think that the tobacco fund is a fine idea and I wish to thank you a thousand times for your gift.

CORP. JOHN I. MCQUESTERS,
Co. G, 104th U. S. Inf., A. E. F.

Those Patriotic Rotarians in Honolulu

Honolulu, T. H., March 7, 1918.

Mr. A. B. Dick,
"Our Boys in France" Tobacco Fund, New York.

Dear Sir:

The Honolulu Rotary Club has always endeavored to do its share of War work, and one of the channels through which its energies could be best expended, was that of supplying tobacco to our troops at the Front.

About two weeks ago, Empey's article was read at a meeting, and since that time over $500.00 has been put into the Club Tobacco Boxes by members and others who can realize and appreciate the need of tobacco at the Front.

No direct solicitation has been made for funds, all that was asked was for the contributor to deny himself some small unnecessary article and put the money in the "Smoke Box."

We realize that if we act independently in the handling of this coin, the results will probably not be as good as if we acted in conjunction with an established fund, and for this reason are writing you asking for details regarding your fund, and also any suggestions you may have in regard to the best way of handling the money which we have now, and that which will be contributed later.

Kindly let us hear from you at an early date, as we think there will be at least $1000 in the fund by the time your reply can reach here.

Yours very truly,
J. UNGER, Chairman Honolulu Rotary Club Tobacco Fund.

Figuring On Tobacco Culture in California

Leaf Similar to Turkish May Be Grown in the Golden State—Report That the Standard Commercial Tobacco Co. Intends to Plant About 15,000 Acres—A Significant Announcement Made in San Francisco.

From more than one source, recently, have come assurances that tobacco similar to Turkish and suitable for cigarette purposes may be grown successfully in California, and the war, imposing additional expense on the importation of Turkish leaf, and multiplying the difficulties incident to securing adequate supplies, is likely to hasten experimentation in tobacco culture on a large scale in the Golden State.

Among the largest and most resourceful of American importers of the so-called Turkish tobacco is the Standard Commercial Tobacco Co. Ery Kahaya, the president of the big corporation does not lack information pertaining to the procurement of tobacco desirable for cigarette manufacture. Nor is he a man given to vain speaking. It well may be believed then, if Mr. Kahaya was correctly quoted, in an interview appearing in the San Francisco Call, shortly before the president of the Standard Commercial Tobacco Co. departed on his voyage to Japan, that tobacco culture is to be attempted in an important way in California.

As reported by the Call, Mr. Kahaya said:

"For years and years we have been importing our tobaccos from Greece, Turkey and Russia at enormous expense. The duties are high, and we have to maintain our own steamship lines aand insruance companies to transact our business. The war has been a heavy additional burden to us. On the other hand, the war has increased tobacco use to a very large extent.

"We have made experiments with tobacco all over the country, and we have come to the conclusion that California is very well adapted to the culture of tobacco if properly handled.

"We intend to undertake tobacco culture on a large scale. We will acquire, to begin with, about 15,000 acres in different parts of the State, and establish warehouses at the logical shipping point. At present it seems that San Francisco would be our central distributing place.

"All the tobacco grown here is to be shipped to New York, where it will be sold to the various manufacturers. Our output of 15,000 acres will be more than 6,000,000 pounds. We will have to employ more than 3,000 laborers to do the work. They will be mostly Armenians, Turks and Greeks. The value of our output will be $10,000,000 in round figures.

"If the new industry here is a success we intend to go into it on as large a scale as the available land and the demand will permit. I am sure that the new industry eventually will become one of California's principal ones, and that tobacco will soon rank as prominently here in this State as fruit.

"You have no idea what we have had to put up with in connection with shipping our tobacco here. Last year we brought 30,000,000 pounds out of Russia, mostly out of the Caucasus. Every bit of it had to be shipped overland to Archangel, and then by our own ships to New York. At times the railroad was clogged with our tobacco shipments.

"I do not think that the tobacco grown here will compare with the choicest Turkish tobacco, but I think the product will do for 10 and perhaps 15-cent cigarettes."

Hickey Bros. Prove That Courtesy Pays

Eight Up-to-date Stores That Reflect Credit on the Cigar Trade

Hickey Bros.—William A. and Dennis J., Jr.—owners of eight up-to-date and prosperous cigar stores in Davenport, Rock Island and Moline, are men "honored and trusted." The elder brother, William A., has just finished a three-year term as treasurer and director of the Commercial Club of Davenport, Iowa. And recently he was made a director of one of the largest banks in that city. "Yet it is but seventeen years since the brothers stepped from selling newspapers on the streets into their first store," writes Mabel Ansley Murphy, who, in the April number of the American Magazine, gives a most interesting description of a business built on "Thank you."

Beginning business for himself at the age of 13, William A. Hickey, having the courage to resent rude treatment, was quick to realize the advantage and value of being polite.

"Courtesy pays." And today "Do something for nothing" is one of Hickey Brothers' business principles. Each one of the eight stores contains a free telephone and a free comfort station. In this connection, the best is none too good, for the equipment of the comfort station in store No. 8, opened three months ago, cast $2,000. What this service means is best appreciated by the vast body of traveling salesmen whose work keeps them moving from town to town in quick jumps. "For years, only the saloon gave this service," observes the writer in the American Magazine.

Hickey Brothers have assumed another of the saloon's former prerogatives—they cash a man's pay check. Even more, they put a striking advertisement to this effect in the newspapers every Friday evening. It is characteristic, so it is given in full:

Any one of the Hickey Brothers Cigar Stores will be more than glad to cash your pay check tomorrow, and every Saturday in the future. You will be under no obligation to spend, either. Hickey Brothers, conveniently located, Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline.

They are conveniently located. One of the best corners in each city bears a Hickey Brothers sign, including a big clock, which gives the correct time to the passer-by and at the same time admonishes him, "Time to Smoke a Hickey."

Another service to the public is the clean atmosphere of their stores. I say nothing of the beauty of the artistic furnishings, for money will buy solid mahogany, plate glass and marble; it will put in luxurious leather seats for the convenience of the public who wait for street cars at the "Hickey" corners; but it will not buy the wholesome atmosphere that makes a woman shop for her smoking friend as readily in Hickey's as in a department store.

"Do you find it hard to get the public to co-operate with you in giving your stores this tone?" I questioned.

"No, for people are always ready to give back to you whatever you give them. Our keyword is, 'If we should ever forget to say Thank you when you purchase from any one of our cigar stores, you can have your purchase free.' A perfunctory 'Thank you' is tabooed in our stores. A clerk must feel the 'Thank you' he says. And since he feels it, the customer responds with the same good will. This is the reason we have no trouble in keeping our stores as clean morally as in appointments."

"You believe in people, then?" I remarked.

"We do. We take the public into our confidence. We are interested in helping every man, and we believe every man is interested in helping us. One of our signs reads, 'We would like to be on Easy Street at forty-five.' Other men have the same ambition; and it makes a bond between us. For instance, when we opened our last store, we said: 'We will appreciate from away down deep, your assistance in helping us to make our eighth establishment a success.' And the public is so interested that we have had to put in the window a bulletin saying 'We have been ninety days on this corner, and our business has been superfine'."

Hickey Brothers believe in service to their employees. "I want to be a pal to every man who works for us," says William A. Hickey, and he is. Of the thirty-six employees, many have been with the organization ten years, some even since its modest beginning. What wonder then that when Hickey Brothers say, "We are for every man in our employ," they may add with modest confidence, "And they are for us personally."

Third—but of the service given by these two men through private channels it is not fitting to speak. Be assured that those they touch outside of their stores are no less their friends than are their business associates, one of whom recently said publicly: "The success won by Hickey Brothers is truly theirs. What they own and stand for has been gained through inborn courtesy, intelligent service and hard work."

Hard work? But the Hickey Brothers say their work is "fascinating"; one of their signs confides to the public, "Hickey Brothers Love Their Work"; and William A. Hickey says, "Hard work never hurts anyone—it's the things a man does aside from his work that wear him out. A good, decent, moral man who works hard can't help making money. But while he works, he must smile. A ready smile spells success. Though, to be sure, if you love your work, you can't help smiling."

And so the Hickey Brothers work hard; they smile while they work; they give something for nothing to every man whose life touches theirs; they serve the public with courtesy and good will, confiding in it, and asking its co-operation. Therefore the Tri-Cities rejoiced with them when last June a boyhood dream found fulfillment. On the busiest corner of Davenport, where as boys they sold papers, they bought a brick building at a high figure, and remodeled the first-floor corner into one of the finest and most comfortable cigar stores in the United States. At every window in its three stories is a box of flowers and hanging vines, and each casement is shaded by green awnings, lined with white. The bit of green is a gift to the public, a rest to the eye of every passer-by; it brings no money return, yet it is well worth while, for it is of this store in this building that the public demands to be told whether it is making good. And to the public Hickey Brothers say:

It is the Tragedy of Progress
That you have to MAKE GOOD
MAKE ROOM.
We are doing our utmost to make good.

BECAUSE THE DEMAND FOR FINE PARTAGAS CIGARS NEVER CEASES.

Experts must be on the job, always, getting goods ready for shipment. Ever, in this busy corner of the great factory in Havana, is on view a choice assortment of delicious smokes. And, from the room shown in the picture, go exquisite cigars that gladden smokers, all around the world. Partagas business is steadily increasing.

Walter M. Smith, sales representative of the Tobacco Corporation of America, will proceed westward from New York city, calling on prominent jobbers in New York state, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas. He will handle the entire line, specializing more notably in La Sultana, six cent, Little Flanders, five cent, Conquest, six cent, T. C. A. smokers and Wm. Gellette and Duke of Flanders in the ten and fifteen cent sizes.

Different Customers

Mrs. H. S. Collins, in charge of the War Savings booth in the United cigar store in the Flatiron building, received a visitor Tuesday afternoon whose request was : "Give me a whiskey!"

Mrs. Collins handed him a War Savings Stamp, for which he paid a quarter, remained a moment, then put down another quarter saying: "Another!"

"You see, it's this way," the man explained, as he pasted his stamps on an almost filled Thrift card. "Every time I feel like having a drink, and that's mighty often, I hustle in here and buy a stamp instead, and then I always buy a second one for having had the will power to buy the first one instead of a drink. See? So long—I'll be in again soon."

Later a woman entered the store with her small daughter. She hesitated a second, and then carefully placed a quarter on the table.

"This is all the money I have in the world," she explained, "but I guess I can manage somehow. The least I can do is to give what I have, isn't it? All I hope for is that we win this this war."

From 12 until 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon thousands of workers from the nearby factories crowded up to listen to the Hebrew Orphan Asylum band on the roof of the store. The forty musicians ranged in age from 10 to 15 years.

A detail of marines from the Brooklyn Navy Yard sold stamps during the playing and collected several hundred dollars. At 2:30 o'clock Leonore Ulrich, leading woman in "Tiger Rose," arrived in an automobile and remained some time to sell stamps. She was accompanied by her sister, Frances Ulrich. From the steps of the car the actress disposed of page after page of stamps.

AMERICAN AND ENGLISH INCOME TAXES.

In comparison with the tax levied in England on incomes our own income taxes are moderate, indeed.

In England the tax on incomes of $1,000 is 4½ per cent., in America nothing.

In England the tax on incomes of $1,500 is 6¾ per cent.; in America nothing for married men or heads of families, and 2 per cent. on $500 for an unmarried man.

In England the tax on an income of $2,000 is 7⅞ per cent.; in America nothing for a married man or head of a family, and 2 per cent. on $1,000 for unmarried men.

The English income tax rate also increases more rapidly with the growth of the income than ours, a $3,000 income being taxed 14 per cent., $5,000 16 per cent., $10,000 20 per cent., and $15,000 25 per cent., while our corresponding taxes for married men are respectively two-thirds of 1 per cent., 1½ per cent., 3½ per cent. and 5 per cent., and only slightly more for the unmarried, due to the smaller amount exempted, the rate being the same.

HARRY VAN PELT BECOMES SALES MANAGER.

Joseph B. Bock, of Brooklyn, manufacturer of La Flor de J. B. Bock and the Royal Moor brands, has added another good man to his staff. Harry Van Pelt, who was with F. Garcia & Bros., of Tampa, for 25 years, will take charge of the credit and sales department for Bock.

J. Suarez, superintendent of the Bock factory, will leave soon for Havana to inspect and secure a supply of high-grade tobacco.

With a capital of $1,000,000, the Sumatra Sales Corporation has been incorporated by R. Beck, M. A. V. Clark and C. Bernhart, of 701 West 179th street, New York.

SOPHIE TUCKER, ACCLAIMED "THE MARY GARDEN OF RAGTIME"

A Vaudeville Star Who, Personally Has Raised Upwards of $10,000 to Buy Smokes for American Soldiers in France. Her Heart Is in Her Work for the Boys "Over There."

Miss Sophie Tucker can't shoulder a gun and help the boys in the trenches put the finishing touches to the Huns, but she has been working day and night in order to do her little bit towards keeping the soldiers supplied with smokes. And in so doing she has established a record.

During the past year, Miss Tucker, known as the Mary Garden of Ragtime, has been traveling over the big vaudeville circuits, including Canada, and during her performances she has made personal appeals for contributions to several tobacco funds. In every town that she stopped she has enlisted the services of other "acts" on the bill and has given cabaret shows in the big hotels for the purpose of securing contributions for the smoke funds. And when she was unable to secure the free services of other "acts" she gave a cabaret show all by her lonesome and went among the audiences collecting funds.

In doing this sort of patriotic work she was giving more of her time and energy than she gives to the vaudeville theatre managers who pay her $1,300 a week. Miss Tucker, however, has not lost anything by putting herself out to get smokes for the soldiers, not if the reception she has been receiving at the Riverside Theatre this week is any criterion, where she is playing with her Syncopated Band. And she deserves it all, because she worked hard for years, rising from a six dollar a week singer in a concert hall to one of the highest paid performers in vaudeville.

To date Miss Tucker has collected more than $10,000. Some of the money has been turned over to the New York Sun Fund, some to Canadian funds, and the rest to other smoke funds. However, she does not feel that she has done her full share, and has arranged to hold a monster cabaret at the Claridge Hotel as soon as she returns from Boston, where she plays next week. She expects to have the best vaudeville bill that was ever offered to the New York public, and has big hopes of adding a few more thousands to the money she has already collected.

No one in the realm of the theatre has done more for our soldiers than Sophie Tucker.

Philadelphia Shown To Be Wide Awake

Happenings There Just Now Are of Much Importance to the Tobacco Trade

PHILADELPHIA, March 19.—Anybody who thought all the talk about a Spring drive was bunk, pure and simple, got in on the wrong end of the betting. The Spring Drive has started and from present indications there is no telling where it will end. On top of the opening of a new store at Ninth and Walnut streets by the United Cigar Stores Company, and the releasing for a term of years of the United store property at the southeast corner of Broad and Sansom streets, the Schulte chain here has announced the formation of two new links. One will be at the northeast corner of Broad and Walnut streets, and the other at the northeast corner of Thirteenth and Market streets. Some years ago the United had the Broad and Walnut streets corner. Other corners at this intersection are occupied by the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, the Ritz-Carlton, and the Manufacturers' Club. Work already has been started on both of the new Schulte sites. The Thirteenth and Market streets place is to be divided up, and the Schulte company will occupy only one-half of it.

Announcement also is made by Stanton M. Harris, representative for this district of the Schulte Company, who makes his headquarters in New York, that stores have been rented in both Wilmington and Washington. The Wilmington site is at 8th and Market streets, just next door to the big Du Pont Hotel. That at Washington is at Fifteenth and F streets. Reports from the new store recently opened in Trenton by the Schulte firm are far better than the company's expectations. And while on the subject of the Schulte string, it may be worth mention that the recent discount deal put over by the company, with employes sharing in a percentage of the profits, went completely over the top. In the main store in this city, at 8th and Chestnut streets, sales for the 24-hour period agreed upon for the deal were bigger than for the same period of time just before Christmas—which is going some.

Something that comes pretty durn near being an official society indorsement of the question as to the propriety of smoking in the presence of ladies, said smoking to be done, of course, by the male persons present, has been handed out in this city. It came about at a recent meeting of the Kiwanis Club, held in the Bellevue-Stratford. About 200 women were just settling down with their knitting to listen to the various topics to be brought up when Thomas Shallcross, Jr., president of the club and a member of the local Board of Education, happened to feel the need of a weed between his teeth. So he proposed that the ladies vote on the question of whether or not the men should smoke. And the ayes had it by a vote that was almost unanimous.

Urgent recommendations by the recently appointed price committee that the members of the Philadelphia Cigar and Tobacco Merchants Association get together, and do it without delay, on the subject of some kind of a standard price for standard goods, were made at the meeting of the association held last week. Members of this committee are Franklin K. Sterner, Charles B. Lloyd and Sam Corson. But just to show that the committee realizes there is one best way in the movoment for standardized prices that will turn in for the retailer something like a fair margin of profit, the committee made another session that entitles it to a place in the hall of fame, or something like that. What was it? Why, this committee up and suggested that the whole trouble with most cigar and tobacco stores is that the proprietors of said stores fail to read their trade papers as religiously as they had oughter.

Seriously the committee, both in its joint report and later in remarks by each of the members, said that it is the height of folly to buy trade papers without reading them. It pointed out that if small retailers had been reading their trade papers as closely as they should, they would have learned long before now that they should do something about finding out what it is costing them to do business. Instead, however, retailers are just beginning to wake up.

It was further urged that all dealers who are not now subscribing to any trade papers do so immediately. The trade paper is to the business man what the newspaper is to the public—a watchman for his interests.

Four new members were elected at the meeting. They are Henry G. Cutler, of 102 Arch street; Joseph W. Levy, of 3647 North 21st street; Herman Grossman, of 16th and Race streets, and B. M. Clapp, of Germantown.

The Association also voted for the chair to appoint a committee of dealers to call upon jobbers and see why more of them are not lining up for membership; also to straighten out a few little kinks in distribution that have disturbed the equanimity of some of the dealers recently. Maurice Jones, R. P. Robb and Samuel Beckett were named to this committee.

A new price list recommended to its members by a price committee of the St. Paul association was received, and it was voted to convey the thanks of the Philadelphia body to the St. Paul dealers. President Leach announced that he will invite N. W. Farley, of the National Cash Register Company, to address the next meeting of the Philadelphia Association.

Robert Conahay, formerly with the United Cigar Stores company, has joined the forces of the Schulte string in this city at the Eighth and Chestnut streets store.

A slight let up in the well known congestion of our dear old railroads having evidently put the average business man into a better humor, conditions are now becoming worse again. Every big manufacturer of cigars in the city is having trouble getting out his shipments and within the past week big distributors for several of the more widely known local manufacturers have been in town seeing if they can't find some method of easing shipments through. So far none has succeeded to any large extent.

L. C. Tyler of the firm bearing his name, who distributes for the Allen R. Cressman Co. in Ohio, came along from Wooster to see what he could do about increasing shipments to him of "Counsellor." He reports greatly increased demand for this smoke all along the line.

The Juan F. Portuondo Co. reports that it is getting excellent returns from Wanrer Searle, who is on a trip through New York. W. F. Armstrong, of the Sprague Warner Co., Chicago, was a recent visitor to the Portuondo plant and offices here. For the fifth—perhaps it is the fifteenth—consecutive year, the Portuondo firm has snapped up the contract to supply its very good smokes to the patrons of the Philadelphia National League ball team, this year. Anybody who wants proof that the smokes are good need only look back over the Phillies record. They have satisfied the fans in ill fortune and in triumph—didn't the Phillies win a pennant a year or two ago?

Samuel Bayuk, president of Bayuk Brothers Co. makers of the "Philadelphia Hand Made," and "Havana Ribbon," has just sent a cable of general interest to the entire cigar trade to his home office here from the island of Sumatra, where he went some weeks ago for a combined business and pleasure trip. Because of its interest to the trade the firm has made it public. The cable follows:

"Estimated 1917 Sumatra crop will produce 35,000 bales of American grade. This exceeds normal requirements by 8,000 bales."

Manufacturers here are not yet ready to discuss what may happen to the normal requirement in the next twelve months. The taking away of thousands of smokers for the American army have apparently increased the demand, rather than showing a decrease. Not only is the government buying direct for its fighters, but their friends are also shipping tons of smokes, in addition to which the various tobacco funds are constantly in the market.

Charles Bobrow, of Bobrow Brothers, manufacturers of "Bold" is away on a trip to the west during which he will stop at various intermediate cities for the purpose of introducing the Bobrow company's "discriminator" a new seven cent cigar. This has found general favor with the trade wherever introduced, according to reports so far received.

Another newcomer in the cigar field by an old established firm is the Hilbronner & Jacobs' company's "Jarona" to sell for 10 cents straight. It will be made in three sizes.

Following the recent announcement that I. Baum, of the cigar department of Reeves, Parvin and Co., had been appointed local distributor for the Boston "Blackstone" line of cigars, Mr. Baum has let it be known that his firm is considering the advisability of going into the jobbing end of the cigar and tobacco business.

Just by way of diversion here comes a social note. L. W. Erlichman likes getting into the trade news so much that he won't be kept out of it. A few weeks ago he left the Schulte Co., for which he had been district manager. Then he went out to sell "Don Digo's" for the Pent Brothers Co. And last week he walked around to the third floor of Philadelphia's $24,000,000 City Hall and bought himself a marriage license. The bride to be is Miss Edith Feurerstein, daughter of Dr. W. Feuerstein, of this city.

Recent visitors to the trade here included George T. Glover, of the Deisel-Wemmer Co., H. G. Wemmer, of the same firm, of Lima, Ohio. Max A. Kreielsheimer, of Allentown, vice president of the Tobacco Corporation of America, who made his headquarters at the Sansom street store of Yahn & McDonnell.

Owing to the fact that his nephew, Edward Kreh, has been called in the new national army, Henry M. Kreh has sold his cigar store at 49 South Front street to George A. Doyle.

The funeral of Robert B. Gilbert, of the firm of Charles Gross and Co., tobacco jobbers, was held last week. Mr. Gilbert was one of the most widely known men in the trade in this city, although he had not been active since 1914, when he was stricken with paralysis. Since that time the business has been conducted by his son, John L. Gilbert. When Mr. Gilbert first joined the Gross company in 1887 the headquarters was in Kensington. Later the business increased to such an extent that it was found desirable to have quarters nearer the centre of the city, and the office was removed to 132 North Fourth street. The company is the distributor here for the General Cigar company. Thomas B. Gilbert, another son of the deceased, is division manager for the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

WHEN ALL CLOCKS ARE PUT AHEAD.

The Public Service Commission has called a conference for next Saturday of all operating managers of New York city's transit lines to rearrange schedules when daylight saving begins at 2 o'clock on the morning of March 31. The commission was informed by traffic experts that very little change was necessary.

Tampa Prepares to Exceed All Previous Outputs

Demand for Cigars Never Before Was So Great—But Shipments Are Retarded Because Transportation Is Lacking—Endeavor to Secure More Freight Cars for Florida—Stamp Sales for February—Secretary Houston's Visit—People in Tampa Are Persistent Purchasers of War Savings Stamps.

TAMPA, March 16.—That Tampa will eclipse a former records in the manufacture of cigars dring the present year is indicated by the rort of internal revenue collections for the nnth of February, in which the local office ntributed to Uncle Sam's coffers more than hlf the amount contributed by the entire State. Tmpa's record was $183,834.47, while that of te State was $342,712.67. Local collections t s week amounted to $43,692.35 against $24,-54.32 for the same week of last year.

Although the demand for Tampa-made cigars fr exceeds that of former years, the manu-fcturers continue to be greatly handicapped l lack of transportation facilities resulting fom the government's embargo. Secretary of Agriculture Houston will visit the city during te present week and will be appealed to to use is influence in the matter of providing better fcilities for shipping crops from south Florida. l case anything is done in this line, conditions ir the manufacturers may be bettered some-nat by the use of an increased number of cars. lnder present conditions, though, shipments are ling paralyzed.

A. L. Cuesta, Sr., of the Cuesta-Rey factory, ter investing $100,000 in Liberty Bonds, gned up as the thirty-fourth Tampan to in-st $1,000 in thrift stamps.

Miss Hortense Lopez, talented daughter of elestino Lopez, of the Arguellas-Lopez Com-ny, starred this week in the presentation of "The Blue Moon," a dramatic production put on by amateur artists of Tampa. Miss Lopez appeared to excellent advantage.

Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Regensburg are in the city from New York, visiting Jerome and the factory.

M. B. Pendas, head of Y. Pendas & Alvarez, is among the visitors of the trade from Gotham.

George Leghorn, president of the Morgan Cigar Co., who recently spent several weeks in Tampa, has arrived at Seattle, his northwestern headquarters.

John Bain, Jr., editor of Tobacco Leaf, who has been at Miami for some time on account of his wife's illness, informs local friends that Mrs. Bain is improving, and they will return to New York within a short time.

H. Erlich, of the Erlich Manufacturing Co., is visiting the factory for a time.

By a vote of 3 to 2 the county commissioners this week decided to postpone the sale of Hillsborough County's $875,000 issue of road bonds, doing so at the suggestion of the war securities committee at Washington. This act will delay the paving of needed additional roads for an indefinite period.

Admiral Albert Ross, a veteran of the navy, was in the city this week. He visited Mullet Key, which he stated was an excellent site for a naval airplane base.

Tampa leads all Florida cities in the sale of War Savings Stamps, the record being $70,-913.77 against Jacksonville's $51,398.24.

I. C. C. Rules for Marking Freight

The Traffic Bureau of The Merchants' Asso-ation of New York has received a notice is-ued by the Interstate Commerce Commission roviding a uniform rule for marking less than rload freight, which provides as follows:

The Director General of Railroads having equested the Commission's approval for filing, y all carriers by railroad subject to his juris-iction, schedules containing the following uni-orm rule and regulations and practices govern-ig marking less than carload freight, viz.:

RULE FOR MARKING L. C. L. FREIGHT.

SEC. 1. Freight, when delivered to carriers to e transported at less than carload or any quan-ty ratings, must be marked in accordance with he following requirements and specifications, xcept as provided in Section 2 (b) of this Rule r otherwise provided in specific items in this lassification or in the Interstate Commerce ommission's Regulations for the Transporta-on of Dangerous Articles other than Explo-ves by Freight. If these requirements and pecifications are not complied with, freight will ot be accepted for transportation.

MARKING SPECIFIED.

Sec. 2 (a). Each package, bundle or loose iece of freight must be plainly, legibly and urably marked by brush, stencil, marking rayon (not chalk), rubber type, metal type, asted label (see Note 1), tag (see Note 2), r other method which provides marks equally lain, legible and durable, showing the name lf only one consignee, and of only one Station, own or City and State to which destined.

When consigned to a place of which there re two or more of the same name in the same tate, the name of the County must also be hown.

When consigned to a place not located on the line of a carrier, it must also be marked with the name of the station at which consignee will accept delivery.

When consigned "To Order," it must be so marked, and further marked with an identifying symbol or number which must be shown on shipping order and bill of lading.

LABELS.

Note 1. Labels must be securely attached with glue or equally good adhesive.

TAG REQUIREMENTS.

Note 2. Tags must be made of metal, leather, cloth, or rope stock or sulphite, fibre tag board sufficiently strong and durable to withstand the wear and tear incident to transportation; and

When such cloth or board is tied to any bag, bale, bundle or piece of freight, it must be securely attached through a reinforced eyelet.

Tags used to mark wooden pieces or wooden containers must be fastened at all corners and center with large-headed tacks or tag fasteners.

Tags may be tied to wooden pieces when the freight would be injured by the use of tacks or tag fasteners.

Tags tied to bags, bales, bundles or pieces must be securely attached by strong cord or wire, except that when tied to bundles or pieces of metal they must be securely attached by strong wire or strong tarred cord.

FREIGHT EXEMPT FROM MARKING.

(b) A shipment that fully occupies the visible capacity of a car, or that weighs 24,000 pounds or more, when shipped from one station, in or on one car, in one day, by one shipper for delivery to one consignee at one destination, need not be marked.

COMPARING MARKS WITH SHIPPING ORDER OR BILL OF LADING.

(c) The marks on bundles, packages or pieces must be compared with the shipping order or bill of lading, and corrections, if necessary, made by the shipper or his representative before receipt is signed.

OLD MARKS TO BE REMOVED.

(d) Old consignment marks must be removed or effaced.

FREIGHT IN EXCESS OF FULL CARS TO BE MARKED.

(e) Freight in excess of full cars must be marked as required for less freight than carload freight.

And it appearing, That uniformity of marking rules, regulations and practices of all carriers by railroad is both desirable and necessary to avoid delays to and loss of shipments and to prevent undue discrimination and preferences:

It is ordered, That the rule, regulations and practices hereinbefore set forth be, and they are hereby, approved for filing by all carriers by railroad, without formal hearing, which approval shall not affect any subsequent proceeding relative thereto;

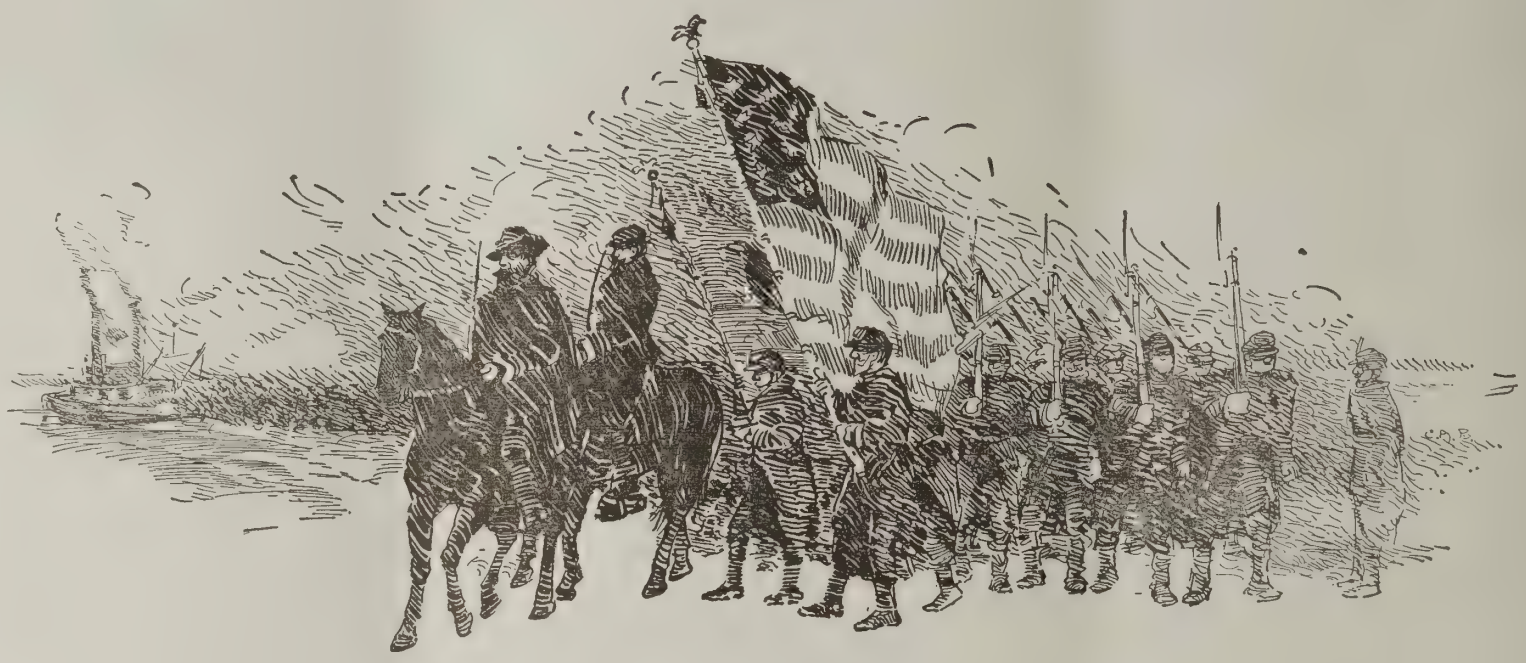
It is further ordered, That said carriers be and they are hereby, authorized to cancel from their effective sechedules, rules or regulations which conflict with said uniform rule, regulations and practices;

It is further ordered, That said schedules must be filed upon not less than thirty days' notice to the Commission and to the general public by filing and posting in the manner prescribed in section 6 of the Act.

Wisconsin Notes

EDGERTON, Wis., March 15.—The tobacco growers have so nearly finished the stripping of the crop that nearly all are beginning to call for delivery dates and anxious to get their tobacco off the farms before the busy season for seeding starts. The deliveries at all the receiving points have been the most liberal the past week of the season. The markets have been crowded every day with hundreds of teams and the farmers are carrying away larger checks than ever before for this product. The railways, too, are better able to furnish cars for shipments to warehouse points, so that movements are going along much more satisfactorily.

Shipments of old leaf are now going forward from storage to eastern factories more liberally, and receipts from outside points for warehouse handling are coming in quite freely.



The report is current that the Weil fireproof storage in this market has been purchased by the Greene Tobacco Company, of Janesville.

Melvin Haas, of Haas Bros., Cincinnati, was a visitor in the State for a short time this week in consultation with their representative, W. B. Wentworth.

The story is told that the crop of one grower near Portage was so badly frozen that all he had to deliver was two bundles, and he owed the buyer 50 cents as overpayment on advance money.

Fred Greene, for several years past state superintendent for the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. at Watertown, has been promoted to manager of the Toledo branch of the company. He succeeds William M. Chalmers, who resigns to go into the jobbing business with his brother at Kansas City. Donald McInnes, of Stoughton, succeeds Greene at Watertown.

Alderman John Dickerson is about to remove his family to Portage. He has been in the employ of the General Cigar Company for several years, and as the company is operating the Portage branch this season in packing, Mr. Dickerson's work will be largely at that place, where the office business will be transacted. Van Ness Green is now in charge of the business in this market.—Edgerton Reporter.

WHEN THE BOYS CAME HOME IN "65"

Manila cigars then held a firm place on the American Market. SIX and NINE cents were popular prices for smokes at the close of the Civil War, and Manilas sold for exactly the same money—size for size—as the Imported Havanas.

High Tariffs, made necessary by the public debt and the cost of war, excluded Manila cigars from the United States until Free Trade was again established with the Philippine Islands in 1910. SINCE THEN THAT TRADE HAS GROWN FROM 67,261,-545, IMPORTED IN 1915, TO 215,693,368 IN 1917.

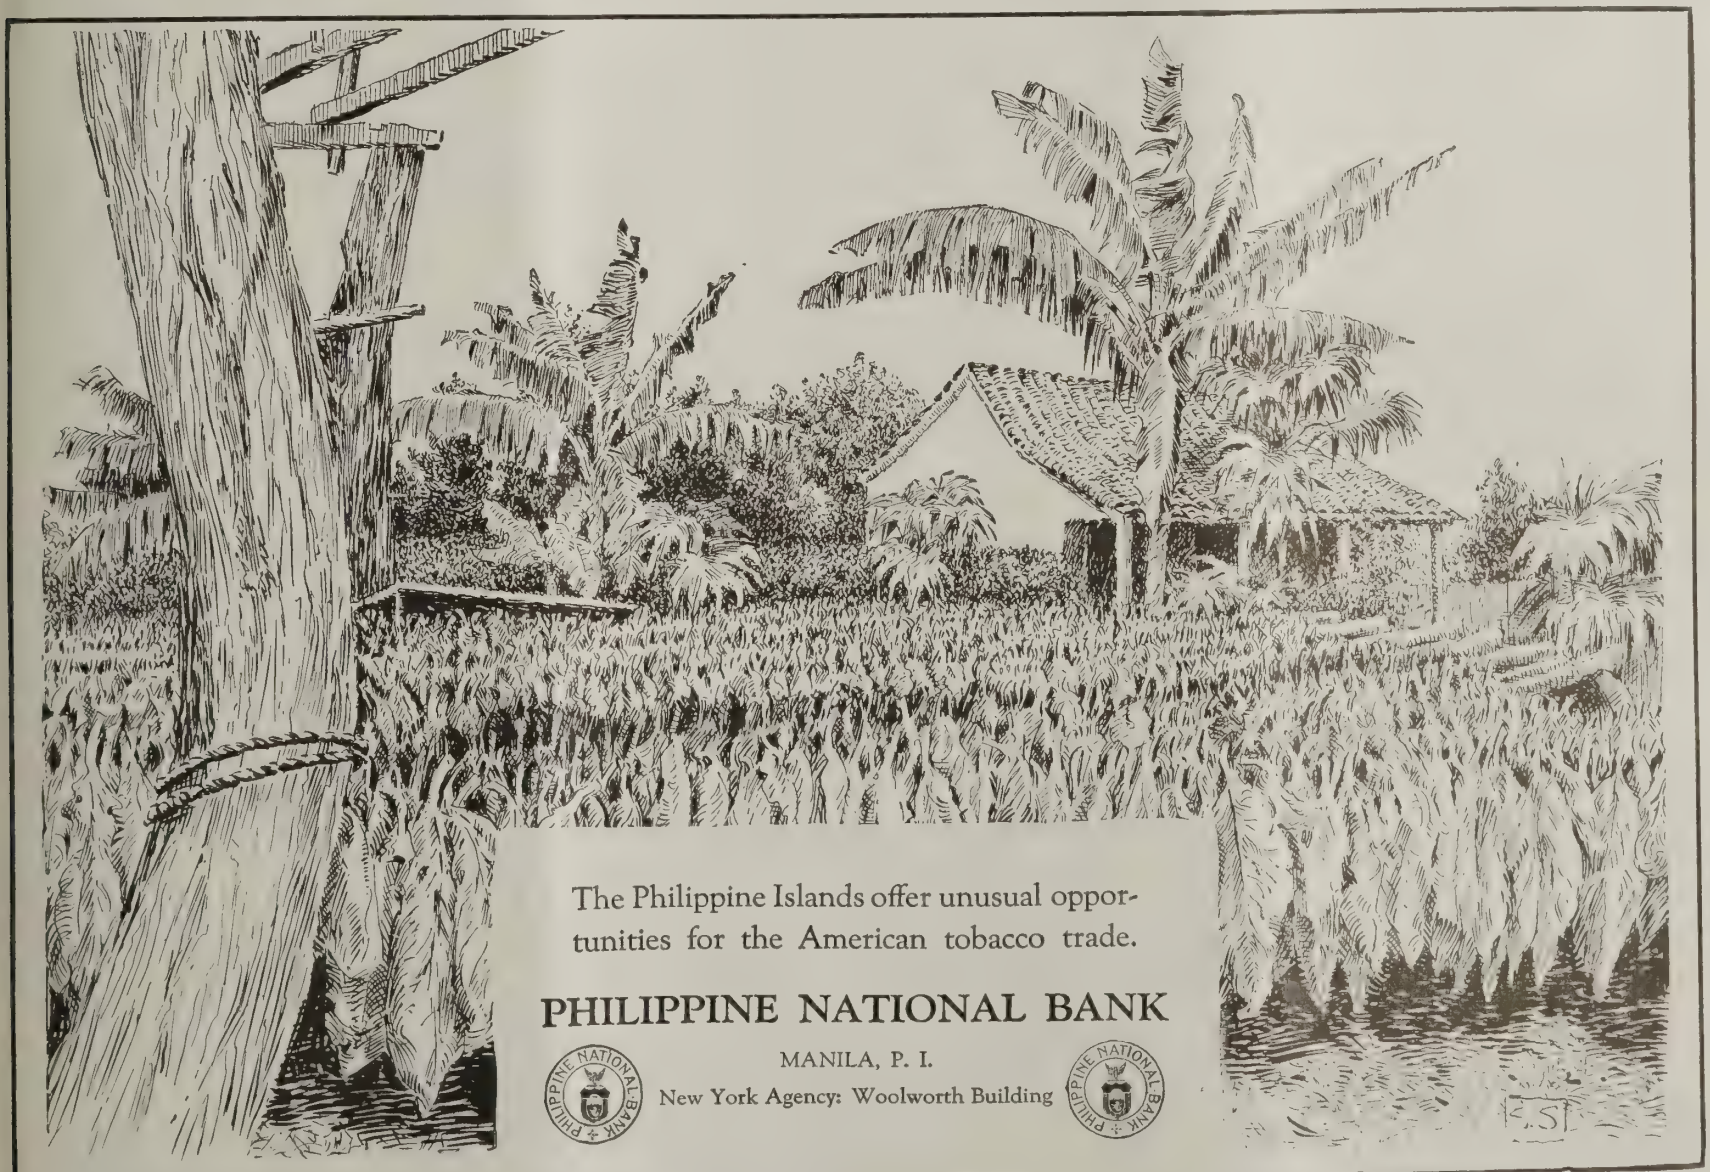
ALUMINUM PRODUCTION OF THE UNITED STATES AND OF THE WORLD

The recent action of the President in fixing the price of aluminum calls attention to the rapid growth of this industry in the United States, which has now become the leading world producer of aluminum. A compilation by The National City Bank of New York shows that the production of aluminum in the United States has grown from 60,000 lbs. in 1890 to 7,000,000 in 1900, 48,000,000 in 1910, 100,000,000 in 1915, 140,000,000 in 1916, and approximately 180,000,000 in 1917, these figures being in very round terms. The value of the product, which amounted to a couple of million dollars in 1900, was 16 millions in 1915, and approximately 46 millions in 1917.

This rapid increase in our production in this line places the United States far in the lead among the aluminum producing countries of the world. In fact, about one-half of the world's output of aluminum is now produced in the United States, for while authorities differ somewhat as to the production by certain of the respective countries, they agree that we now produce about one-half of the world's output which is variously estimated at from 135,000 to 150,000 tons, or slightly more than the world's production of tin for which aluminum is now becoming a substitute in certain lines.



This fact that aluminum is proving an acceptable substitute for tin in certain industries, and that its cost is now no greater than that of tin, is especially interesting and important to the United States because of the fact that while this country produces no tin, and sends large sums of money abroad for that article, it is now the world's largest producer of aluminum and able to increase indefinitely its output. Practically all of the 65 million dollars worth of tin imported into the United States in 1917 came from the Malayan Peninsula, the Dutch East Indies and our South American neighbor, Bolivia, and while most of our aluminum production at present is for use in aeroplanes, automobiles, helmets and cartridges, the possibility that it may be found an acceptable substitute for tin for certain general industries, and thus reduce our dependence upon foreign countries, adds importance to the rapid development of the aluminum industry in the United States, a non-producer of tin. Nearly 500 million dollars has been sent out of the United States in the last dozen years in the purchase of tin, most of it brought from the other side of the globe.

The aluminum production of the world in 1916 is set down at approximately 140,000 tons, of which approximately 62,000 was the product of the United States, 20,000 produced in France, 16,000 in Norway, and 8,000 in Canada. Figures differ radically as to Great Britain, ranging from 4,000 to 12,000 tons production. In Switzerland the normal product is about 20,000 tons, but has been materially reduced by inability to obtain from France the bauxite from which aluminum is produced.

Bauxite, the mineral from which most of the world's aluminum is produced, is found in many parts of the United States, though the bulk of that now used in the industry is the product of the state of Arkansas, and is turned into the finished aluminum at several great establishments in various parts of the country, the most important being at Niagara Falls, water power being deemed an important factor in its successful production. Other works recently established are in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Tennessee and North Carolina.

The prices of aluminum have greatly decreased with the enormous increase in production, falling from $12.00 per pound in 1870, to $2.00 in 1889, and ranging thence downward to an average of 33 cents, and then down to about 20 cents in the year preceding the war. With the greatly increased demand and increased cost of production the average price in 1916-17 was about 33 cents per pound, the President's recent order having fixed the price for the period ending June 1, 1918 at 32 cents. No census figures are available as to the amount of capital invested in the aluminum industry in the United States.

John A. Terrace has been appointed an assistant manager of the Foreign Department of the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, with which institution he has been connected since March, 1916. Before coming to New York he was acting manager of the Royal Bank of Canada, in Montreal, and prior to that was with the Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh and London.

Sayin' which, th' ole M.D. buries his whiskers an' specs in his satchel fer a second. Then, when he comes up fer air, he brings along enuf bottles ter stock a Nor' Pearl street druggist. Takin' a pill er two f'om each one, th' doc proceeds to mix up som' fluid which looks like a new near-beer, but which tastes like asafoetida.

" 'Take this every time you think uv it' sez th' doc, an' then, afore he departs, he suddenly thinks of what his ole fren' A. C. D. Holmes uster shout, 'Quick, Watson, th' needle!' So he puts a-dash uv hypo in me arm. An', when I wake up, me belly-ache is gone, th' cam-shaft an' carburettor is workin' fine, an' the gasoline which intoxicated th' auto I don't drink anymor'. No, never—for I've ratified the prohibition ammendment to the constitution of lil' Benny, an here I am!"

Just then in walked G. W. Thompson, fannin' hisself wid his $10,000 fur coat. "Gracious," sez George, "If this kinda weather keeps up I'll have to send this jacket back to Alaska. Why, I just came out of a long distance booth, after calling up a party in Kingston, and I tell you I nearly melted! But I'm going to Troy now, to tell the jobbers there about the new Liggett & Myers prices, which, like Huyler's, are fresh every hour. When I return, I may be cooler, as the trade up there takes things very calmly indeed, considering the numerous difficulties of the situation."

One Troy jobber, tho, George and the other boys will never see again. For John P. Fitzpatrick died last Tuesday night after a nine day attack of pneumonia. He was associated in business with his two brothers Will and Tom. And, besides these, he also leaves another brother, Henry, and a wife, two daughters, and two sisters. Capitol District tobacco men all knew John, and they were surprised and stunned to learn of his death.

Over at the Ten Eyck, Albany, salesman Sibley turned in his keys to cigarist M. J. Canaday, and announced he was quitting for the West.

"I see," said Benny, layin' down th' evenin' paper, "that the Albany United Stores have been buyin' som' vegetables."

"Buyin' vegetables!" snorted Mr. Ash; "what are you talkin' about, Benny?"

"Uh-huh," nodded Benny, pointin' wid his finger ter th' spot in th' page. "It says here th' United had a feller named Raddish up ag'in' th' United States Commissioner today.

"Raddish swiped a money-order som'where, cashin' it at one of th' United stores. Then he skipped to Utica, where he worked, comin' back to Albany quicker'n th' warrant. But they nabbed 'im over at th' Y. M. C. A., after he enlisted in th' British-Canadian army station at Utica, an' before he had a chance to go over th' top wid any mor' United stuff."

Takin' up his shave-tail duster, Benny went about dustin' off th' bric-a-brac in th' wholesale an' retail establishment of Stubb & Ash, when he happened to think of some news he'd heard about the Belmont Lunch chain:

"Say, Mr. Ash," sez he, twirlin' th' ferris-brush on th' cord till it snapped, "didcha know th' Belmont people were goin' ter take the Brunswick-Balke-Collender place down there on Broadway, opposite the Railroad Station?

"Ya, an' they're goin' to spend a lot of th' money they've made on State street to put up one of th' finest lunch-cigar outfits in Albany. It'll be right alongside th' Waldorf place, all fixt up like a reg'lar eat-an'-smoke house!"

Scratchin' th' stamp on th' empty Owl box, an' stickin' one of Paul Wessells six-cent pasters in a conspicuous spot alongside th' blinkin'-bird on th' fresh fifty he had just opened, Mr. Ash paused a second to lissen to this tale of trouble from a friend of his'n who works for the road division of one of th' big tobacco companies:

"Sam Ash, you've known me a long, long while, an' I think you'll admit I'm no konstant-kicker. But, right now, I verily believe I've got a meritorious moan. And it's this: Our concern has got a zoning system for its salesmen which compels each an' every man to have a territorial headquarters. Now this part of the plan is reasonable an' good. But what do you think of the idee that has been carefully tacked onto this scheme of compelling the boys to accept official station many miles away from home?

"For instance, if a traveling man lives here in Albany, he may be assigned to territory to include Washington, Warren and some of the Northern New York counties. Then his division manager comes along, with an agreement to sign, making Glens Falls, say, the missionary's mailing station. And that simply means the salesman must maintain himself when in Glens Falls and vicinity. Because expense items may be rendered only for actual disbursements while absent from his zone quarters, notwithstanding his family may be located 71 miles away! Of course, the answer is that the man shall move his folk to Glens Falls. But who'll guarantee that a week or a month later the official headquarters may be changed to Kingston, 130-odd miles further south? They're heartless about things like this."

After the salesman with the grouch had departed, Sam Ash started to wet the sponges in the cigar case. And he had just poured a quart an' a pint of fluid into one gaping Florida-fibre when the door opened silently, an' in hobbled a Gnome!

There was no doubt in Sam Ash's mind that his eyes beheld a living Gnome, taken right from the caverns of Rip Van Winkle's haunts! For, there on his shoulder, was the brass-bound oaken keg, 'bout so large as a kit o' nails!

And the Gnome approached the counter, placing his burden thereon without a word, while he searched his pockets for the flagon used by Rip when he drank the slumber-story. But no, this Gnome had a better plan. This he developed by opening the top of the keg an' inserting a cylinder of—tobacco!

Then he spoke: "This, Mr. Ash, is that demonstration keg o' Harmony tobacco. And this brass sign here invites all who will to take a fillin' for th' peter-pipe! By test, the smoker gets the best!"

Saying which, the Gnome was about to leave when Sam Ash suddenly recognized him! "Gracious goodness, Camfield, I thought you were one of the original chaps who made Washington Irving a far-famed man! Did you carry that keg down from Troy?"

"No, Mr. Ash, I had it in service at the store of a downtown tobacconist, and I happened to think you'd like to treat your trade a bit to the mildest and finest tobacco made to smoke. Tell 'em to hit 'er up, chargin' th' cost to the Liggett & Meyers Tobacco Co."

"But, say, Camfield," interposed Sam Ash, "I unnerstan' you've opened a chemical laboratory. What are you experimentin' with—gunpowder?"

"Hardly, Mr. Ash, hardly," blushed Camfield; "my chemical researches have been restricted to the narrow line of mere substitution. Yessir, it's licorice I'm tryin' to imitate. You see, sir, the stuff comes from Turkey, when it comes, but it ain't comin'. So I got the extremely bright idea of mixin' a little substitute of my own."

"How did it turn out, Camfield?" anxiously inquired Sam Ash. "Did you develop something to take the place of this important tobacco flavoring?"

"There's the rub, Mr. Ash," 'fessed Camfield, "for I wrote the company to send along some Burley leaf to try out. And they, probably thinkin' along the line of 'Here's another nut to crack,' simply replied that Burley was entirely too expensive just now to waste in foolish futility."

"What did you do then, Camfield?" pursued Mr. Ash. "Did you try out your dope on some canned spinach?"

"No, Mr. Ash, I merely fixed it all up the best I could—then left it to—let's see, do chemists call it germanize or germify?—anyway, I kept the stuff 'til it turned sour, whereupon I threw the test-tubes outa th' windy, an' killed th' cat!

"But, Mr. Ash, confidentially"—and here Camfield lowered his voice to a mere whisper—"there's millions in this licorice game if I can get it going right. All tobaccos must use it, or they taste like the stuff I assassinated the kitty with!"

When Camfield had gone on his way to Troy, still thinkin' how licorice could be made from coal-tar, Sam Ash proceeded to feed the hungry sponge-moisteners. Then he asked Stubb to 'tend to the counter while he went into the Rotisserie to get a cupa hot water for his own lunch.

Sittin' in at a corner table there, Sam Ash met a fella who covers the Capitol District for Walker & Gibson. "Have you heard, Ash," said he, "that the Bradt Drug Co. is goin' to take the old Morris Drug Co. stand at 9-11 North Pearl?'

"No, I haven't heard a word about it," admitted Ash. "Are they going to continue the other two stores on Broadway an' Central avenue, too?"

"Yes," claimed the drug man. "Warren Bradt will keep the other branches going. And he'll associate in the new store with two former Riker-Hegeman men. They are Jacobs and Hewitt."

"In that big store, with an excellent location like that, such a live cigar-drug firm should do a big business," nodded Ash. "Without alterations, they've now got right there two of the most attractive windows in Albany. Even though the Liggett place is directly opposite, the Bradt people will have the best location, and the finest display features."

"Sure, Ash," assented the drug salesman, "these boys will do well in this new venture. And they ought to handle a pile of cigars for your firm down there, too. Stock 'em up to the limit. They're good for all they buy, an' then some!"

In order to carry out their amalgamation plans as Mr. Ash heard 'em, the Bradt Drug Co. has incorporated for $15,000, nominal capital stock. One of the directors, Charlie Jacobs of Schenectady, will come over to Albany to manage one of the stores, while Cliff Hewitt and Warrie Bradt will look after each of the other locations.

After Mr. Ash had paid his little slip in th' chop an' oyster house, ticklin' th' waiter wit' th' tail of th' bull on a nickel, he met Fred Osborne lookin' for a place to eat.

"My hash in Albany is usually served at Patterson's place, up there by th' Capitol," said Fred. "Fact is, I came down from Troy this morning, intending to get over to Amsterdam. But the Weed-chains weren't in the box, so, says I, 'Eddie-boy, the ice is thick an', the antiskid being absent, we'll beat it back to Troy, where business is fair, an' the girls are fairer. Hasten, Eddie, hasten!'"

Then, while feelin' his way cautiously along th' icy concrete of State street, Mr. Ash ran full tilt into still another chap with a full grip. It was A. N. Duker, the A. T. Co. roll-your-own boy.

"Hello, Ash, howareye?" hailed Duker; "get your daily change sheets on Piper Heidsieck in the new 7 an' 15-cent sizes? Also th' Lucky Strike 'nouncement of 20 for 15 cents?

"Tuxedo is up again, too, though I think I can save you a few pennies on th' list if you get your requisition in now. To make both ends meet in the dead center you've got to take advantage of all these changes. Then you can rake off a bit of cash on th' price-list."

While Jim Stubb was tendin' bar, waitin' for Ash to swallow that there boilin' water in the Rotisserie, a chap came in who useter travel through the Capitol District with Dauntless Doyle, former A. T. Co. scout.

"I met Sam Fulder today, Stubb, an' he wanted to know if I'd seen Doyle lately. I told him I hadn't, an' then he opened up 'bout Doyle an' his dauntless ways.

"For it seems that Sam doesn't like the idea of havin' his show window covered with advertisin' stickers. An', piles an' piles a-times, he's told the bunch not to clinch 'em on th' glass.

"So there was a standin' bet amongst the gang that no advance agent, dead or alive, could stick a sticker on Sammie. Just at the time the wager was made along comes Doyle.

"'Whasamatter,' sez he, 'can't you dubs get a look-in with 103 North Pearl?' An', bein' assured such was the situation, Doyle up an' barked, 'Watch me,' and off he went, the crowd a-trailin'.

"Well, what does Doyle do but go plumb upter Sammie's winder, take out his brush an' paste, an' stick th' bloomin' litho right on th' glass!

"Then in he walks, careless-like, whistlin' 'Sweet Rosie O'Grady', an' says to Sam: 'Jes' put a li'l' 'nouncement on your winder, boss, an' I'm right here now to cover your Tuxedo stock with gratis goods to make th' sale a howlin' success.'

"Jes' th' nerve of th' thing kinda took Sam off his feet, I guess, though he did start to faintly object when Doyle butted in: 'Now, boss, don't stand on your own foot. Take these gifts an' be merry.' An' that's why Sam always asks for Doyle when I go 'round!"

When Izzy, the mail-man, handed Mr. Stubb his morning correspondence, t'other day, there on top was a communique from Quinn Brothers, Troy. What did it say? Oh, merely that the Q & Q cigar had gone to $75 the M. Also, in a foot-note, that the $500 contest for the biggest collection of Q & Q box covers an' Q & Q cigar-bands was creatin' a heap of 'citement on lots of other streets besides the factory site on Congress street in the Collar City.

Then the very next envelope contained a hint from G. W. Van Slyke & Horton, Albany, that the Peter Schuyler cigar had riz up ag'in. Only a coupla dollars, though just enough to make the Schuyler a trifle lower than similar goods of competitive makes. And the new infant panetela shape, retailing four cents each, or six for a quarter, as the like is, was announced as a comer an' a stayer!

Just as Mr. Stubb was about to fold his specs an' push away the joyous news of the several price changes in the checkless mail, who should rush in but Mr. Levy. You know him! He sells those Pent-Up cigars. "Yes," said the salesman from Philadelphia, as he relinquished his grip to Benny for a dime; "yes, I admit it! I'm selling cigars! But how can you turn me down? If you don't want Ustrella you'll surely desire Ta-ho-ma. And the Don Digo brand is sold in Albany by such representative houses as J. W. Stevens an' the Bruce Macdonald Co. So, Mr. Stubb, hadn't I better book you for your requirements of the immediate future? Thank you, I'll attend to the colors and endeavor to rush the factory on those sizes. Good day!"

With Sweet Caps, Hassans, Meccas, Camels, an' a lot of th' favored few cigarettes standin' right up on their toes, waitin' for th' extry penny or two advance on the ten o'clock mail, Mr. Stubb got to thinkin' what a pile a-money he coulda made if he'da put it along there on the shelves instead of down there in Mexico in Alcatraz Gold & Silver, Ltd!

Wow! Just to think, one Capitol District jobber alone, Mr. Stubb was informed, had cleaned up on over five million Camels in the first advance, some weeks ago!

And here, every day almost, was an opportunity to knock Alcatraz Gold & Silver into a cocked hat by simply investin' th' current funds in common, ordinary cigarette an' cigar products!

Talk of lookin' under th' ground, miles down, for hidden wealth! And here it was, all the time, right on the surface, waitin' for some nervy fellers with a scoop to shovel it in! La-la, it made Jim Stubb have a headache just to think of the Mexico Mine in contrast with the Gold Mine right here in his own store!

To take the curse off delayed shipments, Boss Watts informed Stubb & Ash, as well as all Capitol District jobbers, that all Liggett & Myers tobacco shipments, so far as possible, would be sent to either Utica or Albany in solid car-lots, then delivered and invoiced, 2-off-10, from destination, as the goods came to time.

This became necessary because of the excessive investments required of distributors through stock tied up and paid for, though still reposing in congested transport.

Bridget, goin' home after a day's hard work, stopped in the cigar store for her usual package of Copenhagen snuff. "Say, now," says she, "atter all me tradin' here, shure an' Oi don't know th' name o' th' place!"

"This is the Bruce Macdonald store," informed the salesman; "there is a card with the address of 110 State street, Albany, on it in case you want to send for something at a future time."

"Thot's al-roight," nodded Bridget, pushing back the card; "kape ut. Oi shure can't rade th' print, anyway. But what th' divil do a man wi' a foine Oirish name lik' McDonald want tu be hitched up tu a felly wi' a Prisbeterian name like Brawse fer?"

And Bridget surely will never know that Bruce Macdonald is so plaidly Scot that he sometimes returns invoices billed to "B. McDonald Co." Even a MacDonald with that middle capital D won't do!

All the soft seats in the Hot Chair Club were arranged in a semi-circle around the old iron stove in the store of Stubb & Ash before Benny prepared his bundles for the final delivery of the day.

Satisfying himself that things were in apple-pie order for the evenin' session of the Club, an' that, especially, the cushion in the chair of the Exalted Ruler was all set for the weary Potentate, Benny got his nickel car-fare from Mr. Stubb, and made a kellermann-dive for a Pine Hills car.

Lookin' outa th' winder, as he approached Hamilton street, Benny was surprised to see his ole fr'en' John Robert Thompson, who useter sell Battle Ax at 12 cents th' pound, headin' fer the Parkway Theatre with three dames on his arm! "Gee-ja!" sez Benny; "gee-ja!"

Sure, Benny tried to work the 'ductor for an Albany Belt Line transfer, so he could ride down town again on the first nickel, just like the wimmen an' his friend Lew turns the trick! But the bell-man was right onto Benny, an' the very best he could do was to leave the Pine Hills car at Madison and Lark, then either walk or run down to B'way.

First, though, Benny had a bundle to leave with Charlie Van Loon, the Washington Park retailer. This he did, askin': "How's business, Charlie?"

In the s'prise of hearin' anyone mention business in such a careless way, Charlie nearly dropped the sponge he was wipin' the windows with. "Oh," says he, "did you say som'thin' erbout biziness? Well, there ain't much. So many young men 'round here have gone away to fight that things are slow in this section, sure certain. But, with warmer weather——" And Charlie smiled quietly to the sponge, thinkin', no doubt, of the season when the grass is Irish an' the squirrels are nutty!

Ramblin' down to the corner, Benny stopped a minnit to visualize the Anndora display in the window of Supervisor MacAllaster, on Lark street. "Gee-ja," muttered Benny, "that's a beaut. Tom McGowan should get the medale pour le merite for that! I'll bet Mac & Mac both sell two or three Anndoras on the strength of this decoration."

Cristmus! Who should Benny bunk right inter on Madison avenue but Tom McGowan himselfer! "Ah, there, Benny," hails Tom; "goin' down my way?"

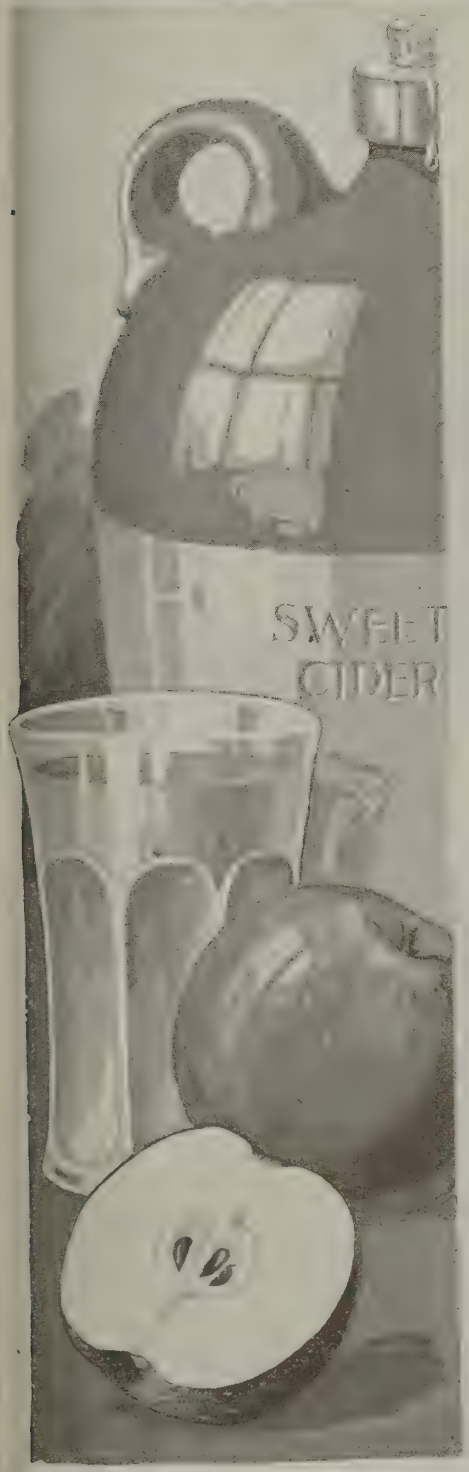
"Sure," agreed Benny; "I'm ridin' myself on neolin. But, say, Tom, you've got a peach of a winder back there on MacAllaster's corner. How'd you do it?"

"Easy, Benny, easy! Just put one nice little dummy top 'er 'nother luvey dummy—an' there's the window! You could do it far better, Benny, if you had the time!"

"Yeh, it's a cinch, I know. Nawthin' to it. Jess pile 'm up 'til they fall over, an' there you are! Still, Tom, how the deuce do you get the goods out so nice an' pretty now? They look a darn sight better 'n they useter when you had the label of the C. M. I. U. How is it done?"

"Well, you see, Benny, in the first place we've completely changed our methods of manufacture. Up there on Broadway we've undoubtedly got one of the three finest shops in the 14th District. Girls now make the Anndora on the bunch system. They get 30 cents for each hundred. This compares with a rate of 18 cents in shops where nickel goods only are made. So, you see, we get more uniform goods at cheaper rates. Fact is, Benny, some of our old union workmen have come back to work alongside of the girls. And, with a very little practice, they soon average $18 to $20 weekly per individual on the team system."

Still 'nother man with a bundle was suddenly sighted hull-down on the horizon! Lookin' through his bifocals, Benny saw it was M. A. Schufeldt. All the way over from Schenectady, with a bundle of Bolds! But he went into a store before Benny could yell a greetin'!



THE SMOKER.

SUPREME COURT SETTLES PRICE FIXING.

The American Graphophone Co. sold a Chicago store records under a contract to resell them at full prices. The store forgot the contract and cut the price, whereupon the graphophone company asked for an injunction, on the ground that cutting the price was a breach of contract and an injury to its business. The lower United States Court refused the injunction and the United States Supreme Court now says it was right. The gist of the decision is that when a man sells a thing, even though it is patented and carries the monopoly that patenting carries, he is done with it. Even if the buyer has agreed, as an inducement to make the sale, to resell at a fixed price, that agreement is void and can be violated with impunity.

Little Stories of the Cigar Business

CHICAGO, March 15.—The Chicago Retail Cigar Dealers' Association held an important meeting Tuesday at their hall in the Masonic Temple. Several matters of vital importance to the dealers were discussed and plans laid for a very active campaign to get in new members were passed upon. After lively talks by several dealers and well known trade organizers, the meeting adjourned to meet again in the near future.

The Master Barbers' Association decided not to raise the price of hair cuts and shaves, but to advertise and appeal to men's pride in their personal appearance.

C. Krise, owner of the store at 47th street and Forrestville avenue, has added "Many Blanc 6 centers" to his stock.

Victor Riley, the box trader, has added a brand of clear havanas made by Moises Bustillo & Co. of Tampa.

The city license committee has put one over on the dealer in cigarettes. "No licenses are transferable this year." Heretofore they could be transferred to other parties for a small sum but now a dealer will have to pay for a full year even though he may take out the license during the year, and then again should a dealer sell out or close his store during the year the amount unused on his license will be a total loss to him.

Myer Bernstein, who moved his cigar store to Rockford, Ill., late last fall, has disposed of same to the Army Camp and has again returned to Chicago. He is looking for a location for a cigar and billiard hall.

Sheblessy Pharmacy, at 35th and Indiana avenue, has a very fine showing of Jose Vila clear havana cigars.

Knowledge, a 5 cent cigar made by the Quality Cigar Factory at Cincinnati, is jobbed here by Many Blanc & Co. You see them in a lot of places.

J. H. Weiss & Co., at 329 So. La Salle street, are showing Flor de Avenda mild havanas made by Spector Bros. The brand is carried in the 10 and 2 for 25 cents sizes.

Brush & Leifer are the successors to Herman Benke, 3856 West Madison street. They job cigars, cigarettes and tobaccos and are making a strong bid for the loop trade.

Wolf & Powers have settled with their creditors for 40 cents on the dollar, paying 15 per cent. cash and 25 per cent. stretched out over a period of 10 months. They will continue in business.

Andy Andernocht has charge of Albert Breitung's store at 409 So. Dearborn street. Andy says business is good. Stub Brevas and Frank's pipes are shown in a big display at this store.

W. D. Walker, the S. S. Pierce Co. traveler in this territory, has sent advance cards that he will call March 19. "Come right along, W. D."

You've got to pay taxes on your poker winnings, but you can't deduct your poker losses from your income according to an internal revenue bureau ruling. This is tough luck on some of the boys who indulge in friendly games.

The Chicago post office leads the country in the sale of thrift and war savings stamps, having sold $346,530.99 worth. "Pity they couldn't have sold another cent's worth, eh?"

The lobby case of the Hotel Sherman has a big Cuesta Rey display.

Several brands are going to advance shortly. Robert Burns 10 centers will go to $75 and the 2 for 25 cent size to $90 April first. It is reported that Owls will shortly be put in the 7 cent class and will cost the dealers $49. Everybody is loading up as the trade has been tipped off to the coming advance.

Prince Albert is retailing for 15 cents in many stores.

The Victoria size of the Van Dyck is getting around. It sells for eleven cents and costs the dealer $82.50.

A very handsome Melachrino glass sign is hanging over the main cigar case of the Sherman Hotel stand.

Cigar displays noted around the loop stores this week, Breitung's chain: Havana Merits; Best & Russell stores, Robert Burns; Geo. C. Knight, Frats; Ed Kirsch, Corina; Wengler & Mandell, Tom Palmer and Club Quality; National Cigar store, Valkyria; Shoemaker & Co., Gato Keywesters and Romeo Garcia Club Life; Clayton stores, Virginia Lee and S. P. N.; J. H. Weiss & Co., King Phillip; Dolan Segar Shop, Henry Irving and Romeo Garcia; Fred L. Wells, Wells' Extra Value; Bloom & Mayer, Charles the Great; Lilienfield Bros., Idolita; and The Harmon Cigar Co. stores, San Alto and El Continuo.

Eddie Fiesch is all dolled up in his new spring outfit these days. Ed always was a "dandy" amongst the grip handlers, but he never overlooks a bet on Travellers made by Haas Bros.

The E. N. Gato Cigar Co. has advanced the price of American Maid brand $5.00 per thousand.

Phillip M. Eddy is associate manager for chief of staff Harry Penney at Shoemaker & Co.'s store. He is a "live" one, a quick worker and money getter.

Frank Elliott, representing E. P. Cordero & Co., is still around. Walter Tobin and Anderson & Thorsen have added his line. Frank landed a big order from the Milwaukee Club at Milwaukee.

Egers Havana Sensation, made at the Chas. Great factory, is a big seller with Eger & Co. on Adams street.

The Lambert store, located in the Windsor Clifton Hotel, has been closed.

Harry L. Harris, of Harris Schwarz Co., New York, visited Milwaukee and Racine this week.

Alfonso Rios & Co., makers of El Talento cigars, will shortly move from their present location at Wells and South Water streets to Wabash avenue and Eighth street. In connection with their factory at the new address they will operate an up-to-date retail store.

The main store of the Clayton Cigar Co., 22 North La Salle street, is all bright and shining these days. Fine Paramount glass signs cover the entire store front.

Roman Dobler of the Park & Tilford sales staff has departed for an extended trip through the middle west.

Basil and Elias Coudax are still "doing" the town. Results are coming fast for these two well known cigarette men.

A big "food-saving" sign will be erected in Grant Park, with the sanction of the South Park board, and through the patriotism of the Thomas Cusack Co. The Chicago Historical Society will probably get it after the war.

The Monroe Cigar Exchange at 176 West Monroe street opened a few days ago is finding business good. Manager Bauer has taken on Romeo Garcia in several sizes.

Clark Cutler is aching to get on the road so he can show the Moises Bustillo & Co. line to the trade. He is planning to hit the trail for his old stamping ground in Texas.

The Canvas Club, in the Rotchild shape a 10 cents, is a new offering in the twelve stores of Albert Breitung. It is a clear Havana Chicago made cigar.

The Clayton Cigar Co. has added the Club Quality 10 for 20 cent short smoke and will offer it to the trade in their five retail stores.

New sizes of Perfecto Garcia & Bros brand are now on sale.

The Chicago Pipe Repair Co., F. S. Bleaden proprietor, is located in the McVicker's Theatre building at 25 W. Madison street. They are building up a big business.

At a meeting of the new National Party convention held here last week Mrs. Frances Beauchamp of Kentucky spoke at length to the convention on the evils of liquor and tobacco traffic. She expressed horror at having seen in the women's dressing rooms of Chicago hotels "no smoking here" signs. "When 'no smoking here' signs are necessary in women's dressing rooms in public places," she said, "the future of the Anglo-Saxon race is in danger. The Indian race is nearing extinction from the use of tobacco and the Anglo-Saxon race faces the same danger." Mrs. Beauchamp then launched into a long and bitter attack on the Red Cross for furnishing tobacco and cigarettes to the soldiers. "The American Tobacco Co. has prevailed upon the Red Cross to aid in extending the use of tobacco among the soldiers of our country," she declared. "It is regrettable that such a great organization, with the support of the United States Government, would consent to such insidious practices. In the training camps of my state it has been reported to me that thousands of boys who never smoked before are now smoking the vile cigarette."

Marquis Eaton, head of the Chicago Red Cross chapter, when he was informed of Mrs. Beauchamp's speech, stated: "No Red Cross money, so far as I know, is spent in the purchase of tobacco or cigarettes for soldiers. The Red Cross, however, does accept gifts of tobacco and cigarettes for the soldiers and considers that in so doing it is gratifying the wishes of the senders and the soldiers. If that is to be condemned then the Red Cross has and wishes no alibi," he said.

The prohibitionists, who are the largest element of this new party, have declared against tobacco in all forms and no doubt will soon have poor old "weed" struggling for existence like the liquor business.

Tampa Club Quadrupeds is a new offering in the Best & Russell stores. They sell four for 25 cents and are packed in foil bundles of four each.

Couthom's store, at 13 South La Salle street, has a window display of Pall Mall, Phil Morris and Benson & Hedges cigarettes, in boxes of 50 and 100.

Creswell, made by E. Regensburg & Sons, is jobbed here by Nathan Fox & Co., who also control the distribution of the Admiration brand. F. F. Shur, who owns the cigar stand in the Garland building, is featuring Creswell.

Tom Moores royal size, sell well. They are wrapped in foil and retail for 25 cents for two.

OLEOMARGARINE MAGNATE SENTENCED.

John F. Jelke, of Chicago, millionaire oleomargarine manufacturer, under sentence to serve two years in prison and pay a fine of $10,000 on charges of conspiring to defraud the Government of taxes, must serve his sentence, declares the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which affirms the decision of Federal Judge Landis. The conviction of seven business associates of Jelke's also was upheld. Francis M. Lowry, general manager for Jelke, must serve a year in the Federal prison and pay a $5,000 fine. The six others must pay fines of $2,500 each.

Conservative Cincinnati Concentrates Cheerfulness

Business Is Brisk, Collections Are Good and Everyone Is More Joyous Because Spring Is Coming—Nearly All the Retailers Have Increased Their Prices—Haas Bros. Co. Will Operate Independently the Recently Acquired Plants of the San Telmo Co.—Lee Heine Injured in an Automobile Accident.

CINCINNATI, March 19.—Business conditions in this market have been quite satisfactory for the past several weeks, and retailers feel confident that trade is going to continue brisk for the next several months. The arrival of spring weather has aided quite materially in the betterment of trade, in the opinion of leading down town dealers, who announce a noticeable increase in sales since the passing of the severe winter season. The activity in all lines of manufacturing, which has kept the working men constantly employed at good wages, has also been reflected in the business of the cigar merchant and other retail tradesmen, and not only the large downtown stores have been benefited by this activity, but the smaller cigar dealer in the residential sections has also received some substantial business as a result. Most of the retailers of cigars throughout the city, including the saloon keepers, have increased their selling figures to 6 cents straight on cigars that formerly retailed for 5 cents, and with few exceptions the public is paying the increased price without the slightest murmur. Cigarettes, too, have been marked up everywhere to the new figures, and no loss in business has been reported by any of the dealers or wholesalers since the new prices became effective. Tradesmen report that smokers are generally taking advantage of the price fraction secured through the purchase of two packages of certain brands, instead of buying in single boxes. For instance, many of the 10-cent brands are retailing in certain stores for 15 cents, or two packs the quarter, and in these places the larger sale is generally recorded. This is particularly true of the hotel stands and prominent high-class bars and cigar shops in the business district.

Jobbers and manufacturers here continue to report excellent business, and the only drawback is the scarcity of efficient help in the cigar manufacturing industry. The leading plants here are running behind on orders, on account of this labor condition, and the outlook is not very bright for any sudden change in the situation. However, the manufacturers are doing the best they possibly can under the circumstances, and are recording and shipping orders in turn as they are received.

The very excellent condition of collections, reported alike by the manufacturers and jobbers, is further evidence of the satisfactory trade the retailers are enjoying.

The past week was quite active in the local burley leaf tobacco market, although sales were held on one day only. Advance announcement of a good offering of high-grade tobacco brought out a large atendance of buyers, and spirited bidding prevailed throughout the sale, with prices on a par with the previous week from opening to the close.

Reports from the country districts indicate the usual preparations to plant an average crop of burley tobacco. Assurances that there will be no Government restrictions upon the acreage set to tobacco this year have encouraged the farmers to produce at least a normal crop in 1918.

The trade here is still talking of the big deal consummated last week by the Hass Brothers' Co., cigar manufacturers of this city, in taking over the business and plants of the San Telmo Cigar Manufacturing Co., of Detroit, Cincinnati and other points. The negotiations were completed in New York City by Marc Hass and officials of the San Telmo Company, who announce there will be no merger of the businesses, and that each will be operated separately as before.

The San Telmo Cigar Manufacturing Co. opened its branch in this city about three years ago, later taking over a large building at Third and Vine streets for factory purposes. Besides the Detroit and Cincinnati factories, the San Telmo Co. has plants throughout Pennsylvania, turning out in all approximately 75,000,000 cigars annually. An increase in the capitalization of the San Telmo Company from $500,000 to $1,250,000 has been recorded with the Secretary of State of Michigan.

"We propose to push the San Telmo brands with our own and turn out in all plants at least 200,000,000 cigars the first year," said Marc Haas to a representative of TOBACCO. "We now have branches of our own in Louisville, Evansville and Dayton, and may find it advantageous to establish further agencies with the increase in business during the coming year."

Lee Heine, prominent retail cigar dealer of this city, was painfully injured several days ago when an automobile in which he was riding with a party of friends skidded and crashed into an iron pole. The machine upset and threw its four occupants to the ground, injuring all severely and one probably fatally. Mr. Heine's injuries include a broken right thumb, rib fractures and probable internal injuries. All were removed to a hospital following the accident, but Mr. Heine was later taken to his home, where he is reported to be mending rapidly. Attending physicians state, however, that he will be confined to his home for quite a spell.

Richard C. Batte, 59 years old, prominently known in this city and adjacent territory as a successful tobacco merchant, died recently at Booth Memorial Hospital, Covington, Ky.

He was for years engaged in the tobacco business in Kentucky, operating a warehouse at Cynthiana. In 1906 he came to Cincinnati and opened a tobacco brokerage office. He also became identified with the Cincinnati Warehouse Tobacco Company.

CUBAN CIGAR AND TOBACCO EXPORTS.

During 1917 statistics show there were exported 111,909,685 cigars via Havana, whereas the previous year there were 121,663,309 or some 10 million cigars more. The two principal markets for these cigars are the United States and England, which experienced a considerable falling off in consumption. The exportation to the United States for 1917 was 44,446,020 cigars as against 49,452,058 in 1916. In 1917 the exports to England were 30,646,522 as against 38,792,565 the previous year. On the other hand, shipments to Spain have increased, being 8,063,145 for 1917, whereas the 1916 figures were 5,107,996. While the quantity of shipments has greatly decreased as shown above, yet a higher price than ever known before was obtained for these cigars, averaging $85.32 per thousand. As regards unmanufactured tobacco during 1917 there were 291,618 bales exported, being 60,602 less than the previous year, but these also brought a record price averaging $65.73 per bale. The 1917 exportation of cigarettes amounted to 12,047.530 packages, being 808,022 more than in 1916. The exportation of smoking tobacco was 261,461 kilograms, or 60,197 less than in the former year. While as shown above there was a heavy falling off in the exportation of cigars last year, the consumption of cigarettes has increased in Cuba as well as abroad, and this is also true here of cigars. It is stated that the value of the tobacco manufactured and consumed in Cuba during 1917 was twice the amount of that exported, the domestic consumption amounting to $19,682,419 as against $10,207,015, the value of the manufactured products exported.—The Cuba Review.

EXCELLENT SALES IN MADISON.

MADISON, Ind., March 14.—Tobacco to the amount of 127,240 pounds was sold on the floors of the four Madison loose leaf tobacco warehouses Wednesday. The market was strong, with an advance of 2 cents over last week on the common grades. Receipts continue heavy, most of the tobacco coming from Kentucky. Record-breaking crop averages are being made by farmers bringing in fancy grades, which are scattered. The highest crop average ever made on the local market was made by Colbert & Barnes, of Trimble County, Kentucky, this week, when their crop of 1,610 pounds averaged $48.80 a hundred all around.

Mediators Try to Settle the St. Louis Strike

C. A. Just Secures a Desired Site for Cigar Store—The Six Cent Proposition Becomes More Acceptable—Kelly's Boquet Featured Strongly in an Aggressive Campaign—Iowa and Northern Missouri Reported to Be Very Prosperous.

St. Louis, March 16.—The strike of the workers of the factories of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., in St. Louis, became effective last Monday morning, and the end of the first week finds the company and their employes as far apart as ever. In fact, the strikers held a mass meeting today, at which they voted to carry the fight for recognition of their union and an increased wage scale to a finish. The company is advertising in all of the daily papers for workers.

Picketing has been going on all week. So far the strikers have been orderly, and the only disturbance was an attack on an attorney for the company, who rescued a woman, who had been roughly handled by a crowd at the plant. Efforts are being made for a conference between the union and the company, to which end a Federal mediator and Father Tim Dempsey, who has had considerable success in settling strikes.

Anthony McAndrew, president of the International Union, who is in charge of the strike for Local No. 140, has received the following telegram from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor: "It is gratifying news that the underpaid tobacco workers of St. Louis have at last reasserted their right to better pay, better working conditions and to organize a union. Express to them my earnest hope for their absolute success."

The Christian Peper Tobacco Co., where twenty-five twisters went out on February 23, have reached an agreement with these employes, and they have returned to work.

The lease of the United Cigar Stores Co. on the stand at the southwest corner of Third street and Washington avenue, which they have occupied for the last eight years, expires on March 31, and after that date the store will be conducted by C. A. Just, who operated the Metropolitan Cigar Store, at Grand avenue and Olive street, one of the busiest corners in St. Louis. The Third and Washington store is owned by the Peter Hauptmann Tobacco Co. It is one of the best stands in the downtown district. It is at the entrance to Eads bridge, the principal gateway between St. Louis and the East Side. Besides, it is located at a point where the wholesale and retail districts join.

The United Cigar Stores Co. will make a further advance in cigarettes and smoking tobacco, effective Monday. Camels, which have been selling at 12 cents, and Prince Alberts two for a quarter, will go to 15 cents. Serene Mixture will go to 12 cents; Egyptian Prettiest, from 10 to 13 cents; Rameses from 22 to 25 cents.

The 6-cent proposition seems to be gradually taking hold in St. Louis, although the process is slow. Some dealers who do not expect that the entire trade will be on this basis until within the next thirty or sixty days. This, of course, depends on how long it will take the dealers to dispose of stocks purchased before the advances went into effect. Some dealers are now selling for 5 cents cigars that would cost them now as much as $42 a thousand to replace.

F. C. Niles, president of the W. A. Stickney Cigar Co., was in St. Louis a day, the guest of C. J. Thorne, general manager of the company. Mr. Niles was on his way to his home in Kansas City, after a trip to Florida.

Kelly's Boquet is reaping the benefit of a most aggressive campaign. The local jobbers are the W. A. Stickney Cigar Co. The Havana-American Co. are much pleased with the results of their work in St. Louis.

H. G. Chambers, who was with the Parker-Gordon Cigar Co. until he enlisted in the aviation corps of the army, and who has been doing some special work for R. J. Seidenberg & Co. in Kansas City, has been notified to report to Urbana, Ill., for training in the flying division. He previously has had ground training.

George W. Duncan, who travels in Iowa and Northern Missouri for the Parker-Gordon Cigar Co., has returned to headquarters here, with reports of unusual prosperity in those sections.

In the Cigar Trade Many Kick But Few Quit

Boston Retailers Have Troubles, Yet They Know That Conditions Are No Better in Other Lines of Business—Perkins Again Heads the Liberty Loan Committee Representing the Tobacco Industry—Happenings Around "The Hub."

BOSTON, March 18.—Retail conditions in Boston and nearby cities during the past month have ben discouraging, on account of early closing, Monday holidays, intense cold, and, last but not least, a shortage of practically all the best sellers. On top of this, cigarette and tobacco prices were changed almost daily; popular brands of cigarettes were sold at a dozen different prices in various sections. Which caused consumers to be balled up, and caused retailers to be "bawled out" rather frequently. There were no joys for the dealers, just glooms. It is said now that the most recent raises in prices and changes in packages are to be effective for some time. In other words now, anticipated and figured out in advance, are the things that had to be done.

Transportation is somewhat improved. Passenger traffic, that is; but delays of freight passage are bad. Jobbers have more merchandise on the road than they have in stock. In some ways, this has worked out profitably, as many articles have advanced materially since the goods were shipped. All the jobbers are shorthanded, which cripples delivery service.

Otherwise, the tobacco business is all right, and the chances are that few if any will forsake the business to enter other fields of industry for other trades have had their troubles, which may be a great deal worse than the tobacco business endures.

The third Liberty Loan drive will begin in April, and Charles B. Perkins, of the C. B. Perkins Co., has been made chairman of the Tobacco Committee. He has appointed the following committeemen: Charles T. Ellis, vice chairman; H. E. Rowley, of S. S. Pierce Co., secretary; Arthur Bracey, of Charles B. Perkins Co.; James E. Logan, of Joseph P. Manning Co.; Fred Estabrook, of Estabrook & Eaton; R. E. Pearson, of the United Cigar Stores Co., and Maurice Hanauer, of Bieringer-Hanauer Co.

In Betweens, made by Kraus & Co., are now an open proposition, handled by all the jobbers. E. E. Steeves, the New England agent, has done excellent work in giving the In Betweens a big distribution.

Irvin Studwell, manager of the cigar department of Park & Tilford, was in Boston this week.

Camel cigarettes are now selling 20 for 15 cents.

Jeff Landry, representing "Tobacco Products," is down in Providence, putting the Army and Navy cigarette on that market. Jeff has placed them in every shop in that city.

Edward McGrady, who had charge of the retail department of George F. Young & Bro., Providence, for nine years, resigned recently to accept the position as representative of Breslin & Campbell, makers of the famous Quincy 10-cent cigar. Ed knows every buyer in Providence, and is hard at work. His many friends in the trade wish him all kinds of success in this new connection.

Farmers held a meeting recently at Amherst, Mass., and the principal topic discussed was whether they should plant so much tobacco this year as they did in 1917. They might use the ground to raise onions, it was urged, but tobacco brought more real money than any vegetable, so that tobacco will again be the choice.

Edward F. McCaffrey, formerly manager and buyer for the Riker-Jaynes Co., but now in the mill machinery business in Worcester, Mass., was in Boston Saturday renewing acquaintances with the trade.

Arthur Myers, of the Falk Tobacco Co., was here recently with Herbert Tareyton, looking all serene and happy.

Maurice Hanauer, of Bieringer-Hanauer Co., was in New York last week.

Frank Swick, the Little Brown Box cigarette salesman, called on the jobbers, returning from a successful New York State trip. He was greeted with some fine windows, having Unis and Phillip Morris displays.

James Clark, formerly of the cigar department of the Boston Tavern, is now in charge of the cigar department of the Arch Inn, Arch and Summer streets.

Ralph Yeretsky, nephew of Meyer Yeretsky, who assisted his famous uncle selling La Integridads and Kingdale cigars, is now in France and writes some very interesting letters to his many friends in the trade.

The Hotel Thorndike, one of Boston's best known hotels, has taken on Dubonnets.

The American House, Hanover street, is featuring Ranchos and Dubonnets.

Harry Ginsberg, for many years in charge of the cigar department at Reeves Wharf, resigned last week to engage in manufacturing ladies' waists.

I. Dane, the Fleet street jobber, who has been ill all winter, is getting along nicely.

Louis Shapiro had charge of I. Dane's business during his absence, but he is liable to be called to the colors most any time, as he is in Class A of the next draft.

ONE OF MANY STRIKES

Cigar Makers in Washington Want Higher Pay—Trouble at Offterdinger's Is Similar to What Is Occurring in Numerous Places.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Henry T. Offterdinger, at 508 9th street, has on his hands a strike of cigar makers. Strike leaders assert that about eighty women and eight men workers—all those who joined the union about a month ago—have walked out. Representatives of Mr. Offterdinger concede that about fifty of the more than 100 women workers have quit, with all the older hands sticking to their tasks.

J. W. B. Petty, affiliated with the Workers' Industrial Union, and Charles A. Hall were employes in the Offterdinger factory over the retail shop, until last Saturday, when they were told that their services would no longer be required. Hall is president and Petty is secretary of the union of Offterdinger employes, which is not yet affiliated with any larger labor organization.

The first demand of the strikers, presented to Offterdinger by Mrs. Rebecca Perry, chairman of the grievance committee, demanded the reinstatement of these men. The complaining workers, instead of going to their benches at the usual work hour, gathered in the street in front of the shop, and waited for Offterdinger. On arrival he declined to accede to this demand, telling the workers that their jobs were open to them, but if they chose to follow Petty and Hall they were under no restraint.

Mr. Offterdinger took the copy of other grievances handed him, and the strikers expect some reply. Higher wages, same wages for women as men, sanitation and heating improvements of the workrooms, and in providing stock, avoidance of delay that interferes with the volume of production by workers comprise these demands. Offterdinger promised to give these consideration.

Of the 14 counts that make up the grievances, six apply to the wage question.

It is demanded that all packers be put on piece work, and their pay increased 25 cents a thousand over the present piece rate, which the strikers state is $1 and $1.25 per thousand.

A minimum price of $10 a thousand cigar making is demanded; for all jobs pay now $10 or more an increase is fixed at Cigar makers now receive, it is stated, as l as $6 a thousand, the higher wages being p to those who make up Havana tobacco.

Five cents per pound on stripping Hav and 2 cents per pound on all other stripp is the increase asked. Present prices, as quo by the strikers, are 10 cents for Havana an cents for other binders and 2½ cents for otl fillers.

On all banding, the demand is an incre of 15 cents on the present wages of 25 to cents per thousand. A rate of 5 cents per th sand is asked for transferring, for which, it stated, 5 cents and under, and sometimes no ing, is now paid.

A $5 increase in the present wage of $15 asked for the caser. Baltimore pays $22 a $25 for this work is the statement of t strikers.

The strikers also assert that many of the creases asked do not bring the wages up prices paid in other cities. Lack of competiti in Washington they explain as the reason the low pay here.

The organization has the name of the Cig Workers' Industrial Union. Its meeting pla is at 811 E street.

DRAMATIZING A DESIRE TO SMOKE.

To Stop Cigarette and Tobacco Price Cutting

Big Grocery Houses in San Francisco May Resort to Drastic Measures—H. Bercovich Featuring New El Sidelo Sizes—S. Bachman & Co. Receive 76 Cases of Gato Cigars—"Webster" McCormick "Swamped" with Orders for Tanforans—Arthur Meyer Achieving Much Success with Humboldts—Other Pacific Coast Notes.

San Francisco, March 13.—The cigarette and tobacco trade of San Francisco is in a somewhat demoralized condition on account of the cutting of rates by some of the jobbers. It is alleged that, in their anxiety to gain business, some of the distributors are cutting prices and increasing discounts to retailers. This has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction among the jobbers, both among those who have succumbed to the cutting process as well as those who refused to make cut rates. Some of the grocery houses are said to have uttered the threat that if the matter is not adjusted on a basis that there can be a profit for all who handle this merchandise, they will take the matter in their own hands and cut these articles even below cost and use them as leaders to attract business. The situation has developed gradually, and without the trade realizing whither it was drifting until the threat of the wholesale grocers is alleged to have been made. Now the dealers are going to make an effort to get together, and see if prices cannot be maintained. Cigars have not been affected by the "little war," but if it becomes more protracted it may include the entire trade.

Ed Rosenthal, who is in charge of the Van Dyck factory products, is in the city calling on old friends. Ed started in this city and got his early training under Mose Gunst. He has worked his way in the tobacco business from the basement up.

The H. Bercovich Cigar Co. has received a new 15-cent cigar of the El Sidelo line, to be known as the Palace and the Regal. The company expects to make good on these cigars, notwithstanding that the 15-cent market is sluggish.

The many friends of Sol Arkush will be pleased to know that he has been appointed to represent the F. Lozano Son's Co. on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Arkush is at present in Santa Monica resting up, preparatory to an arduous campaign as soon as his stock arrives.

It is learned here that John Connor, who formerly conducted the Martinez Havana Co., of Tampa, will soon resume the manufacture of shade grown cigars.

William Bercovich, who recently sold the Capital Cigar Co., of Sacramento, but who retains a temporary interest, was in San Francisco this week on business.

The John Bollman Company Branch of Liggett & Meyers Tobacco Co. has announced the withdrawal of their "Drop Shipment Offer" from the retail dealers of the principal Coast cities. By this system the dealers were receiving an extra discount for exclusive business.

J. C. Chuck, traveling salesman for Frankel, Gerdts & Co., has just returned from an exteded trip throughout the Northwest. He reports a most excellent business in the shade grown Camino Real, in which he oversold the factory in the 10-cent size, and also a very good business in La Natividad.

John Glenn, who represents the Roi Tan brand, is visiting down the Coast with Herbert Solomon, of Ehrman Bros. & Co. He will go as far south as Los Angeles.

I. I. Hess, of Optimo fame, is in Los Angeles. He writes that business is very good with him in the southern city and says that the stocks are coming better into Los Angeles than they are into San Francisco.

Sam Israel says that he is having a great run on the El Wadora cigar, distributed in this market by William Cluff Co. This cigar is still in the 5-cent class, which adds to its popularity.

The announcement is just made of an advance of 10 cents a box on the Hershey chocolate.

C. E. Plummer is meeting with good success in placing the Relu cigarette in San Francisco.

Charles Webster McCormick has arrived merrily on Tanforan Square. He says that business was never better with him. He is literally swamped with orders, regardless of the high prices of goods. He will stay in San Francisco a few days and then leave for Los Angeles to call on the Klingenstein Cigar Co. in that city.

Jim Williams, a cigar dealer from Ft. Bidwell, Cal., was in the city this week looking over conditions and visiting the trade.

Milton Glass, of H. L. Judell & Co., arrived from Fresno a day or two ago and will leave soon for Humboldt. Milt believes in keeping on the jump.

S. Bachman & Co. received seventy-six cases of Gatos recently. These were deferred shipments and all are required to fill back orders.

Arthur Meyer, agent for the Preferred Havana Tobacco Co., reports that sufficient Humboldts are coming in to fill orders, as freights from Tampa via the Sunset route are coming in better than any other. He has just left for Sacramento with Oscar Lazansky, the new Michalitschke Bros. & Co. salesman. The new Hum-

Price Fixing Committee Is Appointed

WASHINGTON, March 19.—In announcing the personnel of a price fixing committee the War Industries Board to-day laid definite plans for a comprehensive scheme of price fixing. For the present this committee will deal only with basic commodities, but it is understood that it will ultimately go much deeper into this important question. Tomorrow representatives of the steel interests are scheduled to meet here with the committee to review the prices already fixed by agreement on iron and steel. The plan in mind is to extend this scheme of price fixing to cover all the articles going into the manufacture of steel and iron.

The price fixing committee, headed by Robert S. Brookings, a member of the War Industries Board, is composed of the recognized leaders in the war of the Government. Furthermore, it is shown by this personnel that the committee will gradually work its way clear of the Council of National Defense and be subject only to the direction of President Wilson. This is the first practical demonstration of the forecast made in these dispatches last week, that the War Industries Board will shortly be separated from the Council of National Defense and be made an independent body.

The announcement made through the Committee on Public Information follows:

"Under the authority of the War Industries Board there has been created a body to be known as the Price Fixing Committee with its personnel composed of Robert S. Brookings of the War Industries Board, chairman; Brigadier General Palmer E. Pierce, Surveyor General of Supplies for the War Department; Paymaster John Hancock of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts of the Navy; Dr. H. A. Garfield, Fuel Administrator; F. W. Taussig, chairman of the United States Tariff Commission; W. J. Harris, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission; Hugh Frayne of the War Industries Board and Bernard M. Baruch, ex-officio.

"Another civilian member of the committee will later be appointed.

"The duties of the Price Fixing Committee will be to pass upon prices for all basic raw materials and to establish from time to time a price fixing policy to be submitted to the President for approval. Any of the executive departments having difficulty in the handling of price fixing matters will have the advice and assistance of the Price Fixing Committee when desired.

"The object of the Price Fixing Committee is two-fold.

"First, it will be a separate body, quasi-judicial in nature for the purpose implied in its name and it will serve this purpose through being made up of men separated so completely from industrial interests that their motives and actions in the determination of prices can be subject to no suspicion of mercenary interest. Prices will not be made until after costs have been passed upon by the Federal Trade Commission. With costs as a basis, the price fixing committee will then consider problems of production and distribution before arriving at its decisions.

"The second object to be achieved by the price fixing committee is speed. The committee will sit all the time and will thus eliminate unnecessary delay caused by the consideration of price fixing problems in several different quarters.

"The price fixing committee, it is understood, will be practically in constant session, inasmuch as it will not only have the detailed duty of passing upon specific prices, but must also outline all national policies in regard to prices. It will be largely an advisory body directly responsible to the President through the War Industries Board. This, for all practical purposes, renders this branch of the work of the Board independent of the Council of National Defense.

Furthermore, it was pointed out to-day that the personnel of the new committee is such as to render it impervious to criticism by Congress and by outside influences. The members selected are all men of high standing and they have no industrial or commercial connections which would render them subject to criticism. In addition to this, the persons on the committee have the confidence of the President.

The only point in doubt is the power which is possessed to enforce the decisions of the committee. It would be possible to refuse coal to any industry not obeying the price fixed by the committee. Dr. Garfield's presence on the committee would be of great assistance in this regard. It might furthermore refuse transportation to an industry for not observing a price, but the authority to enforce such an order is less obvious. For the present the committee will attempt to enforce its decisions by moral suasion and Congress will be asked to delegate authority to enforce the prices fixed only after the necessity for such action is made obvious.

Despite plaints, heard here and there occasionally, retail dealers in New York are doing well this year.

Many and Isaackson of Chicago Acquire 500 Bales of Vuelta Abajo Tobacco—Pastor Sanchez a Large Purchaser for Export to the Argentine—Henry Clay & Bock & Co. Make a Notable Shipment of Fine Cigars to Europe—Excellent Showing Made by Partagas—Other Reports from Cuba.

HAVANA, March 15,—The leaf market continues fairly active, considering that this is the off season and stocks for sale are no longer plentiful. American manufacturers in the market yet may obtain some vegas of Vuelta Abajo and enough Partido resagos. The low grades of Remedios still on hand are not suitable for the United States. However, such tobacco is sought by exporters to the Argentine and Uruguay, and they purchased close on to 2,000 bales this week. There is no change in the prices.

The crop news continues to be favorable for Remedios and Partido.

Admittedly the supply of Vuelta Abajo may be somewhat shorter this year, yet the impression is that the quantity will not fall so much behind last year's production, as all the larger plantations with irrigation systems have harvested more bundles than in 1917. But, remains to be seen the quality of the leaf, after it has passed through the fermentation process. Not until then can it be judged correctly.

Exports per S. S. Mexico, March 2, totaled 361 cases, containing 1,496,604 cigars, and which were consigned to the following countries, viz.: To United States, 786,254; to Great Britain, 516,500; to Argentine, 106,500, and to Canada, 87,350 cigars.

The Spanish steamer Reina Maria Cristina cleared on February 27, 1918, with 203 cases. containing 955,650 cigars, and which should have been included in the exports of the second half of February. The Henry Clay & Bock Co., Ltd., shipped 71 cases with 350,000 cigars, while Romeo y Julieta forwarded 34 cases, 169,500 cigars. As Spain now has more money to spend, the consumption of finer sizes has increased perceptibly, notwithstanding the high duty.

A French steamer may include in her cargo more than two million cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco from Havaan for the week ending March 2 totaled 8,985 bales, which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: To the United States, 8,343 bales; to Canada, 92 bales, and to Montevideo, Uruguay, 550 bales.

Among the leaf buyers who arrived recently were: Sidney Many and Joseph Isaackson, of Many & Koehn, of Chicago; Francisco Gonzalez, of Garcia & Vega, and Val M. Antuono, of Tampa.

Pastor Sanchez was one of the big buyers this week. He purchased 1,300 bales of third capaduras, of Remedios, for export to Buenos Aires.

Many & Isaackson came here for the first time to make a selection of leaf, and they purchased over 500 bales of Vuelta Abajo through Walter Sutter & Co.

Romeo y Julieta have closed their books for the year, but as Don Pepin Rodriguez was telling us, the profits shown were not in proportion to the increased amount of business done last year, considering the amount of capital required to carry always a two years' supply of leaf, the increased cost of raw material, and the like.

Though exports to the United States showed a decrease of nearly 1,300,000 cigars during the first two months of 1918, as compared with the same period in 1917, shipments to other countries embrace important increases.

In fact, the big factories are well provided with orders, but the complaint is that, notwithstanding the raise on the lower priced sizes, manufacturers are unable to make any money.

Partagas was the biggest shipper of cigars by the S. S. Mexico.

Punch, besides having good orders for Great Britain and the States, also is doing a big trade with Spain on the cash down plan, as Don Manuel Lopez does not believe in long-winded consignment operations.

Hoyo de Monterey is busy in all directions—United States, Spain, Great Britain and South America.

Calixto Lopez & Co. are working full force.

Belinda, Por Larranaga and Henry Clay & Bock & Co. are busily occupied. ROSAM.

Some manufacturers are having their profits cut away as the result of express companies refusing to pick up goods, compelling the manufacturers to cart the goods to the terminals. And even when the goods are taken there is no guarantee that they will be delivered on time. Complaints from jobbers and dealers have become numerous, the latter being under the impression that the manufacturers are to blame for slow deliveries.

Proprietors of six cigar stores had a meeting recently in Springfield, Mass. and, as a result, smoking tobacco in tins was advanced from 11 to 13 cents, with the exception of Prince Albert, which went to 15 cents a tin. All 5-cent cigars sell for 6 cents and tobacco in tinfoil, formerly sold for 5 cents is on sale in 10-cent packages. Piper Heidseick chewing tobacco was advanced from 5 to 7 cents, and in the larger size from 10 to 15 cents. Camel cigarettes are 15 cents a package.

Growers in Calloway County, Ky., as in other counties in the Dark district, are receiving better prices for their tobacco this season than before in years. Many growers are expecting the top price to be 20 cents, and some are reported to be holding for this figure. During the past week street prices reached $16.75. The best sales reported from the county were those for the crops of Charley Orr and Bethel Orr, who reside in the Crossland section. They were paid from $18 to $19 each around for their tobacco.

But Nebraska Is the Best Bidder Per Capita—How the States Stand in the Purchase of War Savings Stamps.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—Missouri with a total of $9,015,880 leads the country in the sale of War Thrift Stamps, according to the first detailed statement of the campaign issued by the National War Savings Committee.

The statement made public to-day, and including sales from the beginning of the drive in December to the end of February, also shows the Missouri River States, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas leading in the order named in per capita subscriptions. Maryland, however, advanced to second place in the per capita sales for the month of February, along with New Mexico, Kansas and Missouri following in the order named.

The total and per capita sales of War Savings Securities for States to the end of February are as follows:

The "Grand Atrium," recently completed in the West Baden Hotel, West Baden, Ind., has been dubbed "the eighth wonder of the world." It is a great Pompeiian court, decorated by an artist who has studied the ruins of Pompeii. The big hotel has also been extensively improved with the addition of baths in several hundred rooms and a new golf course has been established in the picturesque hill country near by. Chas. B. Rexford is president of the big hotel and its accessories.

Harold Bell Wright is perhaps the only American author who has become a millionaire by the use of his pen. His success as a popular writer has been phenomenal. He has sold more books than any other author in the world has sold. According to The American Magazine Mr. Wright has written seven novels which have had a combined sale of 7,000,000 copies in less than fifteen years. The average novel published "is lucky" says this magazine, "if it sells 5,000 copies; even the best-sellers won't average 50,000"—yet Wright averages a million copies of every novel he has ever written. Here's the record: "The Shepherd of the Hills," nearly 2,000,000; "The Winning of Barbara Worth," nearly 1,000,000; "The Eyes of the World" sold more than 750,000, as has "When a Man's a Man," while "The Calling of Dan Matthews" has reached over 1,000,000 sales; "Their Yesterdays" has reached nearly 750,000 sales, while "That Printer of Udell's," his first novel, sold over 500,000 copies. The advance sales of his novel amounted to 600,000 copies. Mr. Wright was first a painter and decorator, then a landscape-painter, then he became a preacher.

More than 500,000 business men will be represented at the sixth annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce in Chicago, April 10, 11 and 12. Delegations will be there from every state in the union, from large cities and from small. There are more than one thousand local chambers of commerce and commercial organizations comprising the membership of the National Chamber of Commerce, which includes even such distant bodies as the American Chambers of Commerce at Shanghai, the Philippines, Alaska, Hawaii, Buenos Ayres, Rio de Janeiro, London, Paris, and some half dozen other cities abroad, and each of the 1,000 local members will be represented at Chicago by duly authorized delegates. The resolutions of the meeting may truly be said to be an accurate and authoritative expression from American business, and the fullest possible measure of co-operation betweeen business and the Government may be expected to result.

SHIPMENTS OF TINPLATE.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Out of a total export of 44,707,772 pounds of tinplate, terne plate and taggers' tin in January, 21,023,187 or almost 50 per cent, went to countries to which, under the regulations of the War Trade Board dated February 26, 1918, these commodities may no longer be shipped. It is not to be expected, however, that our total exports will be curtailed to this extent by reason of the order in question since it is understood that the United Kingdom will no longer ship tinplate to the countries to which we are now shipping so that our exports to these countries will be boosted sufficiently to supply the total needs of such countries. Incidentally, the January exports are above the monthly average for the calendar year 1917.

PARCELS TO SOLDIERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 18.—The War Trade Board announces that a special license, No. R. A. C. 43, has been issued through the Customs Service and the Postoffice Department covering such shipments as may be made by persons in this country to, and for the personal use of, individuals serving in the United States Army or Navy or the American Red Cross abroad. This license does not permit any shipments by persons in this country to American prisoners of war, but has been issued in order to facilitate small personal shipments to our soldiers and sailors and Red Cross workers by doing away with the necessity of securing an individual export license for each exportation. Shipments by mail under this license must be made in accordance with the rulings and regulations of the Postoffice Department.

THE CIGARS OF MADAME SAND.

Who of the lights of the stage would dare to do what Mrs. Fiske does in her play, "Madame Sand?" For in that play not only does she wear trousers, but she smokes cigars! Three of the black cheroots are consumed by her in the course of the play.

"Her first performance in the part was productive of a great sensation. The cigar incident was carried over the wires to all parts of the country, and the thousands of the actress' admirers did not know whether to be shocked or to marvel at the temerity of this supreme artiste.

"Those who know Mrs. Fiske realize that she smokes cigars for more artistry's purposes," says the Boston Post.

PEARY FLAG RELIC.

Among the mementos of special historic interest to Americans which members of the Crocker Land expedition have brought back from the frozen north and recently placed on exhibition in the American Museum of Natural History, New York, is a piece of an American flag—a little rectangle of red, white and blue silk deposited at Cape Thomas Hubbard by Admiral Peary while on the famous expedition which resulted in his reaching the North Pole.

The emblem from which this piece was taken is now in Washington, D. C., minus portions that were removed and cached at various points on the journey northward, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Peary left a long piece cut diagonally from the standard. It is not difficult to imagine the thrill experienced by the leader of the Crocker Land expedition when he came upon a portion of our national ensign.

HELPING HIM.

A pharmacist who kept a drug store was holding forth recently on the difficulties which beset a young man in his first struggle with the world.

"I had a hard time when I first started in business for myself," he said, referring to a remark made by one of his hearers.

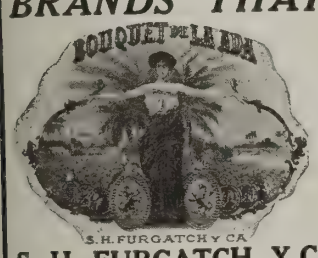
"The public has good intentions toward you, but it sometimes has strange ways of expressing them. An old lady used to come in to buy postage stamps. I observed to her one day that she was evidently a great letter writer.

"'Oh,' she said sweetly, 'I don't really require all the stamps I buy here. It's only because I wish to help a young man like yourself, just beginning to build up a business, that I purchase them.'"—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

SHIP BUILDERS BET $10,000.

The West has challenged the East. Shipbuilders of the Pacific Coast, confident that they will be able to launch one new wooden ship every twelve days, have offered a $10,000 wager that they will set the pace for the construction of wooden ships between now and October 31.

Shipworkers on the Atlantic coast have twenty days in which to accept the challenge, and the indications are that it will not go unanswered. For the men of the East are equally confident of their ability to lead the United States in shipbuilding.



A telegram announcing the challenge was read at the launching of the first of the wooden cargo vessels of the Emergency Fleet Corporation to be completed on the Atlantic coast. The new cargo boat, the Coyote, slid from the ways at the yard of the Foundation Company into the Passaic River at Kearny, N. J., yesterday afternoon. The vessel was christened by Miss Phyllis Hughes, daughter of the late Senator Hughes of New Jersey.

James O. Heyworth, Government manager of wooden shipbuilding, read the message, which was from Grant Smith, head of the Grant Smith, Porter Company, of Portland, Ore.

"Our men," the telegram read, "have $10,000 to wager, for acceptance within twenty days, that they have already set the pace for the construction of wooden ships on the Pacific coast and in the United States for the Emergency Fleet Corporation."

"Money talks and it's saying much for the Pacific coast shipbuilder."

DEATH RATE REDUCED.

ALBANY, March 18.—The general death rate for New York State in 1917 was next to the lowest on record since the registration of deaths began in 1885, according to the preliminary report of Dr. Herman M. Biggs, State Commissioner of Health, made public today.

Translated into terms of human lives the reduced mortality rate for 1917 represents 3,000 fewer deaths in New York State than would have occurred in the year if the average rate of mortality of the first half of the decade had prevailed.

The reductions threaten to be counterbalanced by the increasing number of deaths in the State in the last few years of pneumonia, degenerative diseases and accidents, notably automobile accidents.

Public health work must broaden its programme, Dr. Biggs says, if the increasing mortality is to be checked. The total number of deaths in 1917 was 153,501, corresponding to a general death rate of 14.6 per thousand, which compares favorably with the death rate for 1916, 14.7, and the average for the preceding five year period, 14.9. It is only slightly higher than the 1915 death rate, 14.5, which was the lowest in the history of the State.

The chief reductions in mortality achieved in recent years have been principally by the control of common infectious diseases. This, the report says, has been brought about largely by the improvement in milk supplies, by educational and preventive work of infant welfare stations and by the improvement in public water supplies.

THE PRIME CONSIDERATION.

Profit per acre should be the prime consideration of producers of tobacco, for that kind of profit is based upon quality as well as quantity, because in a limited area the farmer can give more careful attention to the weed and produce a better class and relatively larger quantity of tobacco than if he greedily (and foolishly) tried to spread his activities over unlimited fields in order to harvest a tremendous crop. There are what are called common types of tobacco, but that does not mean an inferior grade of the weed. The so-called "common" tobaccos suit perfectly for certain purposes, and the better their quality, the higher the reward of the farmer who grew them. Hence, it is quality that counts in every class of the weed, and an acre thoroughly cultivated will pay better than two acres handled on the hit-or-miss plan. Besides, the proper attention to one acre instead of the haphazard use of two, will leave more land and labor available for other necessary crops—for foodstuffs that the world is insistently clamoring for.—Southern Tobacco Journal.

TOBACCO STAVES OFF HUNGER.

"Where is the seat of the feeling of hunger and thirst?"

Most people will answer in the stomach or in the tongue. "This however is not correct," declares I. H. Murling, who represents the Netherlands Indian Government in New York. "Recent investigations have demonstrated that such sensations are regulated by the upper part of the colon. Experiments proved that injections of a solution of cocaine in the mouth and in the colon of a hungry man cause the feeling of hunger and thirst to disappear. For five days and six nights such a patient could not be induced to take any food or drink. The conclusion therefore was that cocaine had completely neutralized desire. This explains also the well known effect of chewing leaves of the cocaplant, a custom observed by many travellers among the wild tribes in South America. The cocaine has such a paralyzing effect on the colon that neither hunger nor thirst are felt.

Nicotine has a similar effect. It is generally known, that while smoking one can stand hunger for a much longer time. Soldiers on a march can go without food much longer if they have opportunities to smoke."

Fred Mayer has a fine window display of Garcia Grande cigars in his store at 9½ Church street, New York. The window deserves more than admiring glance from the average smoker.

The T. M. A. is urged by the Government, through the War Service Executive Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S., to impress upon the tobacco trade—particularly those manufacturers who make goods for export—the great necessity of boxing and crating their goods to take the least possible space. The importance of this request to save shipping space is evident and cannot be too greatly emphasized.

American stock holders of Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain & Ireland, Ltd., have received advice from the company of the intention of directors to increase the capital of the company by the creation of 2,646,693 ordinary shares of £1 each and 353,307 restricted ordinary shares of £1 each, bringing the total capital up to £24,000,000. New stock is to capitalize £2,786,624 of the £5,465,501 now standing to the credit of the company's general reserve account.

The Post Office Department has requested commercial organizations to impress upon business men the great advantage to be gained by both the department and the public if they will adopt the practice of depositing their mail at the post office of street collection boxes not only earlier in the day but as frequently as may be feasible. The department states that it would also tend to relieve congestion and facilitate the handling and dispatch of the mails if heavy mailers would make it a regular practice to have all letters and circular mail, as well as catalogues, pamphlets, etc., bearing uncanceled stamps, properly faced for cancellation, with the short and long letters separated.

Arthur McLean, American consul at Puerto Plata, reports that with possibly one or two exceptions there are no show windows in the Puerto Plata consular district which comprises the northern half of the Dominican Republic. Heretofore all the merchants in the region have conducted what are known in the United States as general stores, dealing in everything for which there is a demand. The Dominican Republic is now undergoing radical changes, and is rapidly becoming prosperous and progressive. All indications are that merchants in Santo Domingo will soon commence to specialize. As soon as this occurs, the general store will be replaced by shops specializing in such lines as shoes, hats, clothing, dry goods, groceries, and confectionery, and it would seem that there should then be an opening for show windows and fittings.

DON'T BE MENTALLY LAZY

Beyond the shadow of a doubt the men who do big things differ from those who don't chiefly in the activity of their minds. The big doers keep up a continual mental struggle—collecting and absorbing new facts, studying to understand them, trying to "put two and two together"—until out of this activity they hit upon good practical ideas which they see clearly. No mentally lazy man ever had a really good idea. You can't get good ideas that way. Good ireas are born in brains that keep working. You can't take a fat horse out of a stall where it has been locked up a long time and expect it to win a race. Neither can you expect a lazy brain to get out on the track suddenly and make much of a record. Both horses and brains thrive on excerise.—American Magazine.

Court Takes the Bar Out of the Cabaret

Judge Wessel's Decision Makes Things Different in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, March 25.—Considering the situation solely, exclusively and only from the viewpoint of a hedonist—one of the nicest words our old friend Webster ever trotted out—the Quaker City has slipped back to the days of William Penn, when persons who were so daring and irreligious as to dance or sing got slammed feet first into the hoosegow. It is true that we have victrolas and brass bands today and that the old town didn't have 'em then, but what good are they when they can't be used. Some of the hotel proprietors are feeling so sore about it that they insist they are expecting the announcement of a curfew law, and a law against smoking, and a few other laws.

As had been predicted in this correspondence and elsewhere, the bar was taken right straight out of cabaret hereabouts by Judge Wessel in the case of the Continental Hotel. The license of that famous old hostelry, which has sheltered a lot of notable persons in Civil war days and since, was under attack on the ground that liquor had been sold to minors, and during the attack the question was raised as to the propriety under the Pennsylvania law of permitting dancing and cabaret features where liquor is sold. There were two or three delays in the well known trial, but finally, when the lawyers got through quibbling, the Judge up and announced the death knell of dancing and liquor. Pronto, also quickly and at once, without wasting any time, every hotel proprietor in the city, as well as those in the park, proceeded to lay off on the dancing, and the dear old jazz disappeared. A coupla hundred musicians, including the usual collection of graduate sledge slingers masquerading as musicians, found themselves jobless and are probably back swinging picks at Hog Island by this time.

All of that, however, doesn't seem to have interfered with the sale of smokes in this district. Even the ladies' cigarettes, which were popularly supposed to be consumed mostly by daring young things doing the roof gardens, are still going well.

Nearly every shop and factory in the city has caught the fever of the spring drive by this time and is busy on a general housecleaning stunt. Pent Brothers are doing it up right at their store at the northeast corner of Juniper and Sansom streets, repainting the whole store, revarnishing the cases and otherwise getting ready for the best season in their history.

Strand cigarettes are being pushed in stores all over Philadelphia. Attractive displays have been made within the last week by Oscar G. Link at his place on South Penn Square and by the Widener Building store of Yahn and McDonnell.

Pending the completion of alterations to the new Schulte store at the northeast corner of Thirteenth and Market streets, the firm has stocked up the place with the coloratures, reproductions by a new process of famous paintings, about which mention was made in this colyum some time ago. They are still going like hot cakes.

"The trouble with some of the retailers," says Dan Ostrow of the City Cigar Store, Seventh and Chestnut street "is that they think there is nothing in the world for them to sell but tobacco, cigars and cigarettes." And with that he pointed with pride to a neat stack of candy on the end of the counter. "If I hadn't built that new humidor," sez Dan. "I wouldn't have had any room on the end of that counter. And if I hadn't found room on the counter I probably wouldn't have thought of putting in a stock of candy." The moral is: build a humidor.

According to reports from the Coates Coleman store, the celebrated stogie is rapidly becoming almost as extinct as the Dodo. For some time it has been getting scarcer and now it is durn scarce. Same with little cigars. As one dealer remarked, "if the present shortage continues much longer the jobbers will begin to think they are all dictators. You order a gross and really you're lucky if you get a dozen."

Prices on several more of the one time five cent cigarettes slid up to six cents in the United Stores on March 25, and according to the rumblings reaching some of the dealers, the end is not yet. Nearly every time a local retailer puts in an order nowadays he learns something about increases.

The Ligget stores here, however, are putting over a bargain this week that has the bargain hunters gasping for breath, selling Camels, Black and White and other fifteen cent brands for a jitney when bought with a sixteen cent pack of one of their own new brands.

An amended certificate was filed with the Secretary of State for New Jersey at Trenton recently by the P. Lorillard Co., increasing the capital stock $15,155,600, making the total $41,618,800.

George Hibshman, member of the Pennsylvania Legislature from the Second Lancaster District, and widely known as one of the leading tobacco growers in the "garden county," died last week at his home in Ephrata, Pa. He was born in Ephrata Township, Lancaster county, on August 29, 1852, and was serving his sixth term in the house at the time of his death. He was identified with the Republican party, but although he was widely known as a politician, the greater part of his lifetime had been taken up with the development of tobacco growing. He was one of the foremost to recognize the value of experiments made by the government in co-operation with the Pennsylvania State college in this connection. The legislative delegation from Lancaster county attended the funeral.

Soldiers' Letters

France, February 21, 1918.

Our Boys in France Tobbaco Fund,
New York.
Dear Sirs:

While enjoying a cigarette sent through the kindness of you and a Miss E. G. of Pawtucket, R. I., I will endeavor to thank you for the package of cheer received.

This January was the end of the first year spent in the army. I am proud to wear the pin of the U. S. "Regulars" on my collar, but having only a year in the service, and ever since my enlistment being closely associated with the men called truly "regulars," I cannot call myself anything but a recruit beside them.

But in behalf of this straight-forward soldier, I wish to say a word to show why the tobacco fund idea is a great one.

I have spent the entire year around these regulars, and a finer soldier and fighter cannot be found. They are not a bunch to be always kicking, they are serious.

Now at this time when the presents were coming in fast to the young fellows, it was announced to the regulars that they were to "fall in" for a trip to the Red Cross hut, and on arrival every soldier received a bag containing numerous little necessities, including the package of tobacco from "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." Well, the surprise and look of gratitude on the faces of those regulars was one to study, and a happier and appreciative bunch of men you never saw; the barracks were full of smoke for the next two weeks and some of the men whom I have never seen write a letter, wrote one thanking the donor for the things. You should have been here for a few minutes to see how they appreciated that.

This is the great reason why the tobacco fund is doing good, it brings cheer to everyone alike and lets these regulars know that the folks in America are with them heart and soul.

I was a shoe salesman previous to enlistment and was with the Fyfe Company in Detroit. I came over with the first bunch and have been in France now for eight months. Again thanking you for the kindness shown, I beg to remain,

Sincerely,
L. S. Oberhausen,
A. E. F., Post Office 724.

Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund,
Dear Sirs:

In receipt of your kind donation of tobacco and join the members of company in heartily thanking one and all the members of the fund.

It is our one best bet to receive good old U. S. A. tobacco; it is the one thing that brings us back to the hearts of our dear ones and those whom we know appreciate our task.

Tobacco of good grade is practically unobtainable over here, besides we are beyond reaching distance of any large town where even any kind of tobacco could be obtained. Our hearts are with you all as yours are with us.

Yours Gratefully,
William G. Monohan.

On Active Service, A. E. F.

Dear Sirs:

Received the package sent by you and I am very grateful for it as it was just what I wanted. I answered the card I found in my package and mailed it the same day. I hope the people there enjoy the messages we send back. Folks don't realize just how much good a little gift like that is appreciated "over here" as some seem to think that it isn't much of a gift, but believe me it is a great gift and one that is highly appreciated, as tobacco is the main standby.

You know that a little gift like that puts a great deal more stamina in a soldier when he knows that the people in the "States" realize that he is over here and that they have them in mind all the time, so it makes him thankful that he enlisted and is able to do his "little bit." I should like to tell you of our experiences but you know we are at war now, and it is different than when we were there and the censorship is quite rigid; and besides if a fellow is a good soldier he never writes about things like that especially on foreign soil. I fully realize that the folks should know what is going on but they will have to wait until th bunches commence to march up Fifth avenu or Broadway, then they can turn loose, and hope to be in one of those bunches, and if I an I will try to remember your address and mak you a visit, that is, if you are still there. A I can say now in regard to our doings is tha we are all in the best of health and exceller fighting trim. Thanking you again, very, ver much for your favor,

Glenn Eddings,

When Sergeant J. F. Abbott Met His Brother Sergeant W. J. Abbott at Aix-le-Bai

Two brothers, J. F. Abbott and W. J. Abbott, of Syracuse, N. Y., had not met for ni years. Parted, though there was no severance of fraternal good will, they failed to kee up any correspondence. Each went his way not knowing where the other was nor guessi what his brother might be doing. So soon as war was declared, J. F. volunteered. W. did likewise. But, enlisting at different places, and joining organizations that never ca in contact, each was ignorant of the fact that the other was in the army. Proving to good soldiers, both won promotion.

When American regiments were assigned to duty in the trenches in France, the A bott boys did creditable work. J. F. led a squad that captured some Germans, in "N Man's Land," after a sharp little fight, one night, not long ago. W. J. distinguished hi self when the Huns attempted to raid an American trench.

"Off duty," one day, at Aix-le-Bains, Sergt. J. F. Abbott went to the Y. M. C. A. buil ing to obtain some tobacco. In a crowd of soldiers, just outside the door, he saw h brother.

There was a most pleasant greeting. And the camera tells the rest of the story.

A PATRIOTIC IOWA GIRL

Miss Ida Olson of Decorah Would Give Her Jewelry to Buy Smokes for Soldiers in France.

At headquarters of Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund have been received many patriotic communications from all parts of the United States since the inception of the present movement, but none possessed a more genuine ring of patriotism nor showed more generously the desire to help than the letter appended below:

Decorah, Iowa.

Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund,
25 West 44th Street,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

Was reading the article in The Ladies' World in regard to the tobacco for our boys in France. I haven't any ready money to give but I have some toilet articles which I have no use for and thought they might bring quite a few dollars if they could be disposed of in the right place and this money could be used for tobacco for the soldiers. I am living in a small town so of course have no way of selling them and get what they might be worth. What I have is a gold watch, a ring set with genuine opal and chip diamonds, a toilet case and several other things. In a city like New York there might be a place where one could get their value and the Fund is welcome to these things if they can bring a little cheer to our boys. It also appealed to me in this way, that it would give me the address of many a boy which I would like to send cake and other little things to cheer them up.

Now if this meets with your approval, would like to hear from you by return mail.

Respectfully,
(Miss) Ida Olson.

President Perkins Protests

In the Cigar Makers' Official Journal, of which he is the editor and publisher, G. W. Perkins, Int. President of the Cigar Makers' Union, becomes rather wrathy as he proceeds to "lambaste" verbally a bunch of disgruntled cigar makers in New York.

Concerning demands made by the recently formed association of cigar makers locally known as the Bolsheviki, says he:

"Answering this unheard-of, impracticable, undemocratic, fool proposition, with its threat of secession direct to the organized cigarmakers of New York solely in order that they may have their minds refreshed and ready reference with which to meet this band of would-be destructionists, let me say—"

And President Perkins says a lot. His hot words are not entirely complimentary to the people he is discussing.

Of his comments on the fourteen propositions contained in the "Bolsheviki" pronunciamento, the reference to proposal No. 9 perhaps is the most illuminating.

Thus he throws the light:

"The ninth declaration is a wonder. They speak earlier of our unscientific insurance laws which they say will lead to bankruptcy, but in their ninth declaration they declare that in the event of a strike or lockout the benefit paid to each member shall be $15 per week, and no member drawing this beggarly sum shall be permitted to work in any other factory without the consent of the Joint Advisory Board. If there was any truth in their assertion about our insurance laws, which I deny and will explain why later, then it might be truthfully said that the payment of $15 a week strike benefit without limit as to the right to go on strike for cause or no cause, would lead to worse than bankruptcy. Since they are dealing with the impossible in this connection, why not make it $30 a week! They could pay one just as easily as the other and as long."

MAKING A DATE FOR MAY 12.

Drawn by Charles A. Bond

Poster Put Out by the Tobacco Salesmen's Association of America, Inc.

Voice from the Telephone: "Dearest, would you like to go to the reception and dance of the Tobacco Salesmen? It will be at the Palm Garden on the night of May 12."

She answers: "Perhaps I might. But tell me more about it."

Voice from the telephone: "It will be great. The boys have been planning and working for months to make it a grand affair. They engaged the Palm Garden because the dancing floor is superb. And there'll be jazz music, tip-top stuff."

She inquires: "Will nice people be there?"

Voice from the telephone: "Yes, indeed, I assure you, the elite of the tobacco trade will be represented. Everything pertaining to the dance will be fine and dandy."

Her next question: "Is the dance given for a patriotic purpose?"

Voice from the telephone: "Of course. The chief thought in giving the entertainment was to get funds to buy additional comforts for boys in the nation's service. The Association is raising the money required to send cigars, tobacco, cigarettes, smileage tickets, books and the like to members and sons of members now in the army or navy. That's why I bought the tickets. And I want ever so much to take you to the dance."

She becomes more enthusiastic: "I'll go."

The rest of the conversation was too sweet to be repeated.

CIGARETTE CASE SAVED HIS LIFE.

PARIS, March 25.—An American corporal of marines was struck in the chest by a splinter of one of the first shells which fell during Saturday's bombardment of Paris. He was wounded seriously, but his life probably was saved by the deflection of the splinter by a cigarette case. So far as has been reported he is the only American victim of the bombardment.

THE FAVORITE PIPE OF GEORGE V.

King George V of England is not addicted to cigars quite so strongly as his father was. Usually, in public, says Don Martin in the New York Herald, "the King is seen smoking a cigarette. But he is an old pipe smoker, and in private he enjoys nothing better than a good strong pull at an old carved briar pipe that was given to him by his sister, the Queen of Norway.

"Yes," he said to a friend some time ago, "this pipe is a grand one, and I particularly value it because it was carved by my sister, the Queen of Norway.

"But do you know, when I was a sailor, I smoked a clay pipe and enjoyed my smoke more than I do now. How sweet it was! But now it's different. I must be content with cigarettes.

"I once tried to cut down my cigarette allowance to five a day, thinking they were not very good for me. The first day passed all right; the second day the five were all gone before lunch. The third day I gave it up and smoked fifteen to make up for my abstinence the two previous days."

The King loves nothing better than to get into his dinner jacket and, with his favorite carved briar between his lips, to work on his correspondence at 11 o'clock at night for an hour. That is his idea of genuine recreation.

Have You Fought, Wrought, or Bought?

Have you fought, wrought or bought?

The third Liberty Loan tocsin will ring within a few days. It will call to all bona fide Americans from coast to coast, and from Canada to Mexico, to gather with their dollars for the defense of their country in crisis. Bonds to the value of three billion dollars will be offered for purchase—bonds that carry with them the literal meaning of the word, for they shall bind together for safeguarding and permanent preservation the freedom that has come down to us from our liberty-loving forefathers.

Bonds are bullets. Bonds are rifles. Bonds are cannon. Bonds are shrapnel and shell and ships and torpedoes and submarine destroyers. They mean food for our soldier men in France and the thousand and one necessities of a grim and relentless war. They mean the annihilation of Teuton military autocracy, the destruction of kultur-fetish that has announced the subjection of the entire world to a Germanized boss-ship. To stop the Kaiser all of these war accessories are needed. The only way to get them is through the billions of dollars represented by the bonds.

The tones of the bond tocsin will reach the laggard and lukewarm, as well as the red-blooded American who is ready to fight and make sacrifices. To the former they must have a searching, if not an accusing appeal. They must of necessity convey this question to the man or woman who has been enjoying this country and its priceless privileges as a matter of course:

"Have you fought, wrought, or bought?"

Millions of us cannot go across to the trenches of France. Age and physical condition may be a bar that cannot be surmounted. God knows, in hundreds of thousands of pulse-stirring examples, the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak—and not the weakness of the goose-flesh variety. Great hearted men have done good work along patriotic lines. They are the soldiers of home-help and home-preparation. They have wrought. Also have they bought—Liberty bonds. The patriotic worker and the bond buyer are found continually in company. The coming third loan will not have to appeal long or hard to them.

Take the question home, American men and American women. Are you among the recreants who must answer "No" to all three words of the query: "Have you fought, wrought, or bought?" You are pardoned for not fighting if you honestly cannot. Those of you who have wrought for the good of the country in its crisis, may be praised for having done a good share of your bit. There is little doubt that you have bought if you have wrought. But if your work is merely of the smug, personal sort, can you defend your apathy? Hardly.

Suppose we say to those who have neither fought nor wrought: Here is the chance to even up your remissness. Stick to your personal pathway in this critical time if you will. But in the matter of buying Liberty Bonds—shall you not prove to your own conscience, if not to your countrymen, that the depths of your dormant patriotism have been reached and that you will dedicate your dollar to the land that every freeman loves?

There was an hour when Paul Revere thundered down a road near Lexington crying "Alarum" and calling to arms. There is another Paul Revere galloping toward us now, bearing aloft a Liberty Loan Bond. This bond epitomizes the new American alarum—the call of 1918. It cries that if we do not heed its message, and embrace its opportunity, we perish.

Shall we be helots of the Hun? Have you fought, wrought, or bought? There is no answer to these questions like the answer a Liberty Loan Bond carries.

NO TOBACCO HEARTS FOUND.

Cigarettes, as usual, have been blamed for so many men being found unfit in the recruiting stations of Montreal, but the medical men are far from endorsing the claim made by faddists. They rather place the blame on unhealthy conditions of living and poor home surroundings, as the recruits in other sections of the country are almost entirely free from any symptoms of "tobacco heart." Doctors who have been examining thousands of men for active service say that there have been recorded only an infinitesimal proportion of cases where cigarettes have had an effect on young men. In fact, the "tobacco heart" as a disqualifying factor is practically unknown. A different tenor is given to the cigarette controversy by the experience of men on actual service. A doctor, who has been at the front for over two years, stated that the men at the front could no more do without their cigarettes than their meals. He had seen men undergo serious operations without an anaesthetic smoking a cigarette, and not utter a murmur. It was thought that the "pernicious cigarette" did more to steady a man's nerves than any amount of talking or leadership.—Canadian Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

RIGHT OF WAY TO CARLOADS.

Shippers and receivers of freight must accommodate themselves as best they may to occasional changes of local regulation. Since the warm weather arrived the relaxing of efforts to get coal delivered has eased up the situation generally, at least long enough to take breath and a hitch in the belt.

With this week two new regulations are put in force. The more important forbids the sending here of freight in less than carload lots. This rule will hold throughout the week, during which time every effort will be made to clear away the small stuff that has piled up at the piers and railroad terminals.

The embargo does not prevent the sending out of smaller shipments from New York. The Railroad Freight Traffic Committee asks, however, that outbound material be held till after 10 o'clock each morning.—Evening Sun.

A Thrift Stamp Market

The United Cigar Stores Co., undeniably, is doing its bit, helping the sale of War Savings Stamps. Two weeks ago, the company turned over the display place in the prow of the Flatiron building to the stamp sales committee. And there, the ladies in charge, Mrs. E. H. Collins, Mrs. G. McNulty and Miss V. M. Sanders, have sold upwards of $1,000 worth of War Savings Stamps daily.

Every day at noon a concert of some kind has served to draw the crowd. Monday, the band from the Brooklyn Navy Yard entertained and a squad of Marines went through the crowd selling stamps. On Tuesday the Hebrew Orphan Asylum band held the interest of a constantly recruited throng by rendering snappy war songs; soldiers went through the crowd Tuesday selling the stamps. When they had finished at the Flatiron, they took the band over to the park where a socialist meeting was in progress and sold a raft of stamps there. In reply to a soldier's request to buy a stamp the socialist speaker pleaded he didn't have a quarter, but he purchased a thrift stamp rather quickly when a man in the crowd gave him two bits.

Wednesday was set aside for Belle Storey and Jenny, the Hippodrome elephant, to perform and help sell stamps. The Dixie Jazz band was the musical attraction.

Among other celebrities that came to help the stamp sales were Potash & Perlmutter. Cameras from the various newspapers have been constantly clicking. One of them caught John J. Flaherty, manager of the Flatiron store, buying war stamps from the star of "Tiger Rose."

The sale has brought to light some peculiar phases of human nature. In the past the general idea has been that a pretty girl could outsell a man, but the soldiers this week rather disproved the theory. Persons in the crowd appear to be willing to buy practically anything that the soldiers offer.

While the women are doing their share in selling stamps, the members of the fair sex are not buying so frequently or so heavily as the men. To date the men have purchased more than 90% of the stamps sold at the Flatiron Buildin.g The champion buyer among the men is Pasquela Torro, a bootblack, who wanders about the financial district every day with a box on his back looking for shoes to shine. Every day since the sale began he has purchased at least one five dollar stamp. On his first visit he bought eleven five dollar stamps.

Torro is an Italian and has one son in the Italian army and another in the American army. He is an American citizen and has been in this country thirty-three years. Every day he starts out with his box thrown over his shoulder, and as soon as he takes in enough nickels to buy a new war stamp he hurries up to the Flatiron Building. He intends to keep buying as long as the stamps hold out, figuring that they will come in very handy for his five children. In addition to the war stamps he has $1,050 invested in Liberty Bonds. Torro has become sort of a side attraction down there and he appears to enjoy being clicked by press photographers.

STANDING UP WELL.

"Although some fluctuation in production was to be expected because of the war taxes placed upon tobacco products, the tobacco manufacturing industry of the United States seems to be standing up well under the additional financial burdens placed upon it," says the Cincinnati Enquirer. From the standpoint of the Government it is a greater revenue producer than ever before, and experienced tobacco men believe that as soon as manufacturers are able to completely adjust themselves to the new conditions the productions in all lines will again forge upward at a rapid rate. Large cigars in particular are doing extremely well in spite of the increased taxes, and the record for the month of January, 1918, official figures for which have just been issued, shows a good gain in volume over the corresponding month last year, the bulk of the production being in Class B, cigars retailing at from 4c to 7c each, tax-paid at $4 per thousand. Cigarettes seem to have sustained a slight setback by the increased taxes, although a gain of small proportion is shown. Snuff and manufactured tobacco also report smaller outputs for January, but the Government's revenue from all sources shows a material increase over the same month last year.

The total collections of internal revenue from all sources on tobacco products in the United States during the month of January, 1918, amounted to $12,227,797.69, an increase over the corresponding month last year of $3,878,442.31, or 46 per cent. The total collections for seven months of the current fiscal year amounted to $78,427,377.13, an increase over the corresponding period last year of $20,881,640.20, or 36 per cent.

The record for seven months of the current fiscal year reveals the following comparisons in contrast with the corresponding period of the last fiscal year. Large cigars increased 5,360,997, or 1 per cent; small cigars increased 36,915,379 or 7 per cent; cigarettes increased 4,337,888,256, or 26 per cent; snuff decreased 1,710,644 pounds, or 8 per cent; manufactured tobacco decreased 11,665,874 pounds or 5 per cent.

MADE IT UNANIMOUS IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

To the list of States already recorded as ratifying the Federal amendment, the friends of prohibition can now add South Dakota. The event is rather notable because the amendment, for the first time in its progress through a State Legislature, encountered the opposition of not one vote. The ratification was unanimous in both branches: Senate, 43 to 0; House, 87 to 0.

Uncle Sam's New Machine Guns

John Browning's Marvelous Inventions

"John Browning never has invented a poor gun, and he has invented more guns than any other man living," declares Lucien Cary in Collier's.

"John Browning's father was a gunsmith in Iowa. In 1852 his father decided that Iowa was getting overcrowded. He took the family across the plains in an oxcart to Ogden, Utah. John Browning was born there in 1856. At thirteen he had made his first gun with his father's foot-power lathe and simple hand tools. At twenty-three he perfected his first breech-loading rifle—a modification of the famous Sharps rifle, favorite of the sharpshooters of the Union army in the Civil War, and afterwards of the buffalo hunters. Before he was thirty he had devised the first of that long series of repeating rifles for the Winchester company which has taken the name "Winchester" wherever rifles are known.

"He is the inventor of nearly all the Winchester rifles, of the pump shotgun, the autoloading shotgun, the automatic rifles manufactured by the Remington-U. M. C. Company, of the Colt automatic pistol, adopted by our army and navy and National Guard, and by four European armies, and the Colt machine gun. The Colt-Browning machine rifle and the Colt-Browning machine gun, heavy type, are merely the latest additions to a long list of successes. What is also to the point—they were designed especially to meet the conditions of this war, the war which has made the machine gun famous.

"The experts all agreed that they wanted two kinds of machine gun. For troops going over the top they wanted a light gun, a gun that one man could carry, if possible a gun that could be fired from the shoulder. The Lewis gun, far and away the most successful new gun on the western front, had proved the immense desirability of a light gun in the hands of advancing troops. But the Lewis gun was too heavy to be fired from the shoulder except under the most favorable circumstances and for very brief periods. What the military experts really wanted—have always wanted—was a gun no heavier than a service rifle that would pour a continuous stream of bullets on the pressure of the trigger.

"Browning couldn't give them that—no man could and use the service ammunition. The smokeless charge in a .30-calibre cartridge generates a heat so terrifice that continuous firing is possible only when the barrel has a heavy jacket of water.

"What Browning has succeeded in doing is in giving us an automatic rifle weighing 15 pounds that will fire twenty shots before you can take your finger off the trigger—unless you know how. And twenty more as fast as you can slip out the empty magazine and slip in a full one! By the mere shift of a lever, it will fire semi-automatically: one shot for each pressure of the trigger. In a word, the Browning automatic rifle solves the problem over which small arms experts have sweated for thirty years. It means our army will have the best offensive weapon in the world.

"The gun looks more like a Remington autoloading shotgun than any rifle on the market, and, though heavier than the service rifle by nearly 6 pounds, is no heavier than the single-shot rifle many a skilled rifleman has chosen for fine shooting at a target. The cartridges are carried in a clip or magazine which is inserted in the action just forward of the trigger guard. One magazine with twenty cartridges in it weighs less than a pound and a half. A squad of four men, one with the rifle, and the other three with loaded magazines, can carry a goodly supply of ammunition.

"The gun can be taken down in a few seconds and reassembled with no tool except a single service cartridge. Our machine gunners will assemble and disassemble that gun over and over again until they have eyes in their fingers and can do it in the dark.

"All machine guns stop. It is half the art of the machine gunner to remedy the stoppages in a hurry. He learns all the stoppages by heart—all the possible malfunctions—and how to tell from the outside of the gun what's the matter with the inside.

"The other half of his job is learning how to shoot. He has to learn not only how to sight and range the gun, but how to control the bursts and traverse the barrel. If a machine gun is accurately aimed at one point and kept there, it isn't much better than a service rifle. You can't shoot more than one man at a time!

"A machine gun will fire a dozen shots before the amateur can let go of the trigger. So it takes a specially educated trigger finger to fire a machine gun. It also requires a very high order of skill to place bursts of three or four shots each at intervals of three feet across a wide arc—traversing fire. The Browning rifle, thanks to its semi-automatic device, permits single shots to the unskilled. And it is pre-eminently adapted to shooting from the hip. Browning found in his experiments that when the conditions were favorable it was possible to direct its fire as one would direct the stream of a hose—you can't see the torrent of bullets, but you can see the spurts of dust and direct the gun accordingly. I said that all machine guns stop. But the Browning light machine rifle has yet to show a single malfunction in action. And the Browning heavy gun has made the world's record non-stop run.

"In the tests at the Springfield armory the Browning heavy-type gun fired 39,500 shots without a break. That means it used up just about $2,000 worth of cartridges in one run. In another test 20,000 shots were fired in 48 minutes 18 seconds. There were only three stoppages, and each of these was due to a defective cartridge.

"The heavy-type gun looks a good deal like the Colt machine gun which Browning previously devised, and even more like the Vickers-Maxim gun which the British are using. It is lighter than the Vickers-Maxim. It weighs 34½ pounds with the water jacket on—a jacket that holds about a gallon. It is fed ordinarily with a web belt holding 250 cartridges, although belts of as many as 1,000 cartridges can be used. It fires at the rate of 450 to 600 shots a minute, as preferred. For airplane use the water jacket can be dispensed with—a 100-mile breeze cools the barrel."

SMOKE FUND GROWS

Good Work Done By Many Newspapers for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund"—Out to Get $250,000 the First Year.

Newspapers more and more are co-operating with the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," and some of them becoming envious of the record held by the Providence Journal, which to date has collected $39,354. The Oklahomian of Oklahoma, has been making great strides recently. Last week it put over a special drive for smokes in conjunction with the Lyons Club of Oklahoma, and collected $8,900. Just imagine what could be accomplished if one paper in towns as large or larger than Oklahoma City would duplicate this feat. It could be done readily enough if the right kind of energy were put behind the campaigns. Some papers, however, pay no attention to appeals made for tobacco.

So far the "Our Boys in France Fund" has shipped 490,000 tobacco kits to the boys in the trenches, and there is another 137,000 awaiting shipment. The fund has been averaging $5,000 a week in collections from all sources, and with several new plans it has under consideration, A. B. Dick expects to show a quarter of a million dollars for the first year.

WORKING ON A BOMB THEORY.

Evidence said to support the theory that on Tuesday the destruction of the Jarvis Warehouse Company, Inc., in Jersey City, and of the Erie Railroad repair shops, adjoining, with an estimated loss of $2,000,000, were caused by a bomb, presumably set off by enemy aliens, was discovered Wednesday morning by the police of Jersey City.

As a result, twenty-five detectives, in addition to the Federal authorities, who are holding one man as a material witness, went to work on the case.

"We cannot tell whether what we have found is important or not," said Lieut. Hicks of the Second Precinct station, Jersey City. "But one of our men has found traces of some kind of powder at the scene of the explosion. We are, of course, going ahead on the the theory that the explosion was caused by a bomb."

Lieut. Hicks added that of the two men taken to the station house only one is being held.

WAITING FOR A TREASURY RULING.

The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco will not issue its annual report until the Treasury Department at Washington has passed upon the company's application for an adjustment of its excess profits taxes. In a formal statement to stockholders, D. Rich, treasurer, says:

"It has been this company's custom to issue annually in March to its stockholders a financial statement for the previous calendar year.

"Such statement will not be issued this year until the Treasury Department passes upon the company's application for an adjustment of its excess profits taxes under Section 210 of the Revenue Act of October 3, 1917, Regulations 41, Article 52. Because of the manner of its organization and its present under capitalization, its invested capital not including the millions of dollars spent in building up trade-marks and trade-brands, this company would pay a very much greater excess profits tax than its competitors. The equitable provision of the law above referred to gives the Treasury Department the power to justly equalize such taxes and to place representative concerns, in that respect, upon a competitive basis. The application for such adjustment must take the course prescribed by the regulations and our financial statement must await a determination of the question.

"However, for your personal information, we beg to say that the company's business continued its rapid growth in 1917, which was the most successful year in its history.

"As soon as available, the exact figures will be furnished you in the usual form.

The Complaint Against Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Are We Facing a Revolution in Methods of Selling Merchandise?

(Copyrighted by Elton J. Buckley.)

If the Federal Trade Commission at Washington succeeds in certain prosecutions it has just begun against business men, we will be facing a revolution in business methods, for certain practices will become taboo that have had the sanction of immemorial custom, and in some cases, of favorable court decisions.

This especially applies to a prosecution which the Commission has begun against Sears, Roebuck & Co, the Chicago mail order house, which does an interstate business all over the United States. Understand that the Federal Trade Commission can only prosecute interstate commerce transactions. Practices and transactions carried on wholly within a State are beyong its reach.

I have obtained an official copy of the complaint against Sears, Roebuck & Co, and here present it as the foreword of what I believe I have truthfully characterized as an attempted revolution:

Paragraph VI. That the respondent, Sears, Roebuck & Company, with the purpose, intent and effect of injuring and embarrassing and discrediting its competitors, for more than two (2) years last past, has circulated catalogues throughout the various States and Territories of the United States, the District of Columbia and in foreign countries, among customers and prospective customers of competitors, containing certain advertisements, wherein it is represented that:

(a) the quality of goods, wares and merchandise handled and sold by its competitors is inferior to that of similar merchandise sold by respondent;

(b) certain of respondent's competitors do not deal justly, fairly and honestly with their customers;

(c) respondent can and does buy its commodities in markets, which are not accessible to its competitors, and by reason thereof is able to give customers better advantages in quality and price than those offered by competitors; and that such advertisements and statements are false and misleading and calculated and designed to deceive the trade and general public.

Included in this prosecution was a complaint against that well-known scheme used by all mail order houses, of offering some staple such as sugar way below the market when purchased with certain other goods. I have no intention of discussing that; what I want to discuss is the fact that the Federal Trade Commission is prosecuting a retail dealer because he gave his customers to understand that his goods were better than his competitor's; that certain of his competitors weren't treating their customers fairly, and that he bought goods in markets more favorable than the markets his competitors bought in.

The prosecution is brought under the Federal Trade Commission Act, which forbids "unfair competition."

The important thing about this is that every business man who advertises, whether manufacturer, jobber or retailer, is doing these things every day, and has always been protected in doing them—if they stayed within certain limits—by the general custom and even by the courts.

Of course, if one's representations that his competitor's goods are poorer than his, pass certain limits, they are illegal, and the maligned competitor has an action against him for trade slander or libel, as the case may be (slander if the words are spoken, libel if they are written). But there is no difference between saying that your goods are better than your competitor's and saying that your competitor's goods are poorer than yours. Of course, if the representations you make about your competitor's goods are true, you have a right to make them.

There is a case in which a furniture dealer advertised a solid mahogany bedroom set, "positively of the quality always selling for $150," for $116.50. On the next day a competitor said in his own advertisement that: "the solid mahogany bedroom set advertised yesterday by a competitor as $150 value was in part veneered and had never been sold for more than $100."

A law suit resulted, the first advertiser claiming to have been libeled. He got a verdict, the court saying that the reflection upon the first man's merchandise went far beyond the ordinary limits of competition and advertising rivalry. But such things have been said generally from time immemorial, with no attention from anybody. I have no knowledge of how specific Sears, Roebuck & Co. were in their statements about competitors; if they have made the usual general statements that everybody makes about their goods being better than competitors'—or competitors' being poorer than theirs—they cannot be sucessfully attacked for it, in my judgment, unless the Federal Trade Commission can overturn the settled law of the country.

Everything I have said above applies also to Clause B in the charge, i. e., that Sears, Roebuck & Co. have represented in their advertising that "certain of their competitors do not deal justly, fairly and honestly with their customers." How can a prosecution for a thing like that get anywhere, remembering that some of everybody's competitors don't deal justly, fairly and honestly with his customers? If Sears, Roebuck & Co. were specific in their statements, pointing directly and unmistakably to certain competitors, then there may be something in the charge. If they simply glorified themselves, pointing out, like the Pharisee, how much fairer and quicker and squarer they were than their competitors, I repeat that they cannot be convicted unless the settled law of the land is to be overthrown. And they cannot be convicted at all if what they said was true.

The subject matter of the third charge has also been passed by as dealer's talk. Literally thousands of sellers of merchandise are fond of representing in all sorts of ways that they possess mysterious and fruitful sources of supply denied to their competitors, and that is why, etc., etc., etc. Nobody who does this is very specific, therefore the matter has aroused little or no attention. But it should arouse attention now that the Federal Trade Commission has officially denominated it unfair competition and has prosecuted somebody for doing it.

Apropos of this subject, the Federal trade Commission, I am informed, has also begun prosecution against thirty-eight other concerns, all manufacturers, who are charged with unfair competition "because they systematically and on a large scale" gave employes of customers, prospective customers and competitors' customers gratuities such as liquors, cigars, meals, theatre tickets, valuable presents and entertainments. Here is another good old custom of the trade forced to don a sinister guise as "unfair competition."

A NEW TOBACCO CENTER

To Be Developed at West Salem, Wis.—Increased Acreage Promised—Vernon and La Crosse County Farmers Received $2,200,000 for Last Year's Crop.

The Milwaukee Journal's La Crosse correspondent says: "That 11,000 acres of leaf tobacco yielded Vernon and La Crosse County farmers $2,200,000 during last season, or an average of $200 per acre, is disclosed by a canvass of the tobacco warehouses and buyers operating in this part of Wisconsin. While tobacco has always been a profitable crop for farmers, prices paid during the season reached a new high record, and in consequence the growers are making preparations for increased acreage during the coming season.

"A large part of the tobacco acreage in western Wisconsin is in Vernon County. Raising of the leaf in La Crosse County has spread northward from the Vernon County line to West Salem, and the acreage in this county now totals close to 2,000. A new tobacco center is to be developed in West Salem. Prominent dealers have induced a number of farmers to engage in the growing of the leaf during the coming season, and a warehouse is to be built in the village or near by.

"Comparisons of prices paid for leaf tobacco in this section show that the farmers are receiving over twice the amount gotten for the best leaf three years ago.

"Raising of leaf tobacco in western Wisconsin long since passed the experimental stage. The leaf thrives best in clay or black muck. Frost and hail are the two great enemies of tobacco. For weeks after the planting the young shoots are protected in beds which are covered at night or on cold days with sheets or canvas. When finally transplanted into the fields the leaf must mature in sixty days. There are good-sized tracts of the leaf to be found now in Chippewa, Barron and Dunn counties.

"That tobacco will be raised on 15,000 acres of land in Vernon and La Crosse counties during the coming season is the prediction of leading buyers, who declare the grangers are making preparations for greatly increased acreage as a result of the high prices.

"The State Council of Defense has considered the advisability of taking steps to limit the acreage devoted to tobacco, and it is probable that action will be taken. This has been done in other States, so as to devote more acreage to the production of food."

Conservin' Odds an' Ends O' Trade News

One Up-State Cigar Man Reports "Nothing But Money in Sight"

New York State Capitol District,
March 25, 1918.

"Big change," smiled Benny, "big change." And he swung open the door of Stubb & Ash's wholesale and retail tobacco shop, placing the chuck under the casement with his regal-toe, whilst the sunny breeze swept in and blew out the alcohol cigar lighter.

"Yes, yes," gushed Benny, "Spring has arrivin! An' even th' Big Change ain't notis-a-beel in th' cash register yet, this here 72 degrees an' th' Open Door policy will soon put th' kale where it belongs!

"This climatic conditshun is pretty well illus'rated by that there chappie passin' down State street wit' his trench-coat thrown back, his mits both shoved deep inter th' pockets of that inside jacket of his'n, while he steps out lik' Eddie Weston, wit' a grin on his jaw an' a Rockefeller cigar protrudin' f'om th' grin."

"That's a bester indicashun of daffydills an' lilacs than either th' wedder predictshuns by George Todd or th' comin' of Barnum & Bailey.

"Gee-ja! But who'd a-thought there'd ever be a-nudder Summer after that winter! Why, th' snow in our back-yard was so high an' deep that it knocked th' fence ker-flunk onter our lovin' neighbors' hollyhock bed.

"An' now th' Hudson River's open from Troy to th' hinges of Hell Gate, boats will begin runnin' agin nex' Monday, so helpin' th' freight transport which has had congestin' of th' lungs all Winter, an' th' Legislatur will go home April 13th!

"All these lil' things look good to th' Capitol District. So, after yer look inter them, I guess th' robins didn't come too quick. An' th' kids are right in gittin' out their marbles, tops, jacks, skippin' ropes, roller skates, an' bicycles! For no matter if I do have ter git up a-nour sooner nex' Monday to oblige th' moonlight-savin' fellers, I honest-an'-truly think biziness'll be better jest so soon as Spring an' Summer git goin' thru here lik' a string of Pierce-Arrer trucks fer th' Red, White an' Blue Army to an Atlantic Port!"

"But, say," chuckled Benny, as he refilled and lighted the alcohol-lighter, "d'yer know Manager Morrison of the Estate of D. Hayes, up there in Saratoga? Sure, th' jobbers in th' Spa City I mean.

"Well, yer know then that Saratoga has had a deuce of a lot of snow along Broadway all Winter. An' it snowed there agin las' week when th' sun was shinin' here. So Morrison chases his Third Assistant Adjutant General out to clean 'er off. This gold lace aid of Morrison's is a long, lean, lank, tall feller. So he likes shovels an' choppers wit' handles to fit his shapely panetela size.

"An' Morrison, aimin' ter please all tastes, has th' quartermaster supply 'im wit' a full equipment of six-foot extenshun picks an' things ter remove th' gloss f'om th' surface of Saratoga's nice, broad sidewalks.

"But, wit' all th' ice an' stuff fallin' in Senator Brackett's town this las' Winter, Manager Morrison's outfit got kinda worn out. Jest th' same, when th' las' storm broke, Morrison's orderly was on th' job wit what was left of his brooms, shovels an' spades.

"Then he started in ter clean up th' town, clear aroun' ter Convention Hall. An,' when th' management of th' United States Hotel heard about Morrison's man, they wanted ter know if he couldn't come down an' clean off their hundred yards of snow, too, so's they'd be ready for the 27 days of racin' ter be pulled off in August.

"While th' Grand Union Hotel people also thought 'twould be a grand idee to let Morrison's willin'-worker git their shebang dusted off as well, fer th' poss-i-beel State Convention crowd which may come if th' Direct Primary Law is repealed to suit Billy Barnes.

"But when th' superintendent of Congress Park called up th' Hayes place, an' wanted Morrison to lend a hand in mopin' out that grass-plat, likewise—well, th' House o' Hayes almost lost a val'able tobacconist, fer he threatened to enlist in th' navy right then an' there, so endin' his life in glitterin,' gorgeous glory!"

Sam Ash was conservin' odds an' ends of costly string an' twine, by windin' it up inter sailors' snitches, when Governor Billy Hughes peeped in. "Hello Sam," greets Billy, "how's th' cigarette brokerage business today?"

"Whassamatter, Governor," replies Sam, Yankee-like, "can't yer git away f'om that cigarette salesman's habit of askin' how business is when yer know blame well that it ain't good?"

"Oh, well now, Sam," comes back Billy, "our trade at Grand and Beaver isn't so awful rotten. Why, the Fleahman Brothers were talkin' about sales only this morning, an' they said our farmer friends on the Albany Public Market were getting such satisfactory prices for country produce that they were tossin' their corn-cobs in the Normanskill Creek, an' are now buyin' nothing less than six-cent seegars!"

"Speakin' of cigarettes, Billy," goes on Sam, windin' up more cord, "did you know what's goin' ter happen ter th' Lord Salisbury brand?"

"No, what's on' Sam? I haven't heard a word," admits Billy.

"Lissen here, then," beckons Sam, whisperin' in Billy's ear, "they're bein' advertised heavy now as a 16 for 15-cents proposition, but I have it on pretty good counsel that the interrogation marks at the bottom of every ad simply mean that th' price will soon be changed to 20 cigarettes for 25 cents."

And Billy went away thinkin' of th' time, not so long ago, that he uster peddle a quarter cigarette himself—let's see, wasn't it the Egyptian Deities?

"Hey, Jim!" yelled Sam Ash to his partner, Stubb. "Where'd you put those signs I made yesterday?"

"What signs?" asks Jim Stubb, addin' up a deposit-slip, an' not appreciatin' th' interruption.

"What signs!" hollers Sam, gittin' mad. "What signs! Why, those Mecca-Sweet Caporal-Hassan signs, raisin' prices ter six cents fer today—where are they?"

"Oh, them?" says Jim mildly. "Let's see, Sam, I think I saw 'em on th' packin' table, an', not realizin' their purpose, I rather think I used 'em fer stuffin' up a case of goods we shipped yesterday to O. B. Davis, of Middletown."

"Well, you're a pippin, you are," announced Sam, hot under the arms. "Are you my partner here, or ain't you?"

"Why, yes, Sam," answers Jim, "I'm sorry it happened, but—"

"Aw, cut it out, Jim, cut it out," replies Sam, coolin' off. "But hereafter please let them things alone I put on th' table there. And, if you're goin' to be my partner, act like one, that's all!"

Just then, through the wide open door came George W. Thompson, the man who furnishes th' fixtures fer th' Piedmont Hot Chair Club, famous as a social institution in th' 'stablishment of Stubb & Ash.

"Merely on my way up to the Secretary of State's office to register more ottermobiles," confided Gee W. Tee. "For it's time, you know, to put the Liggett & Myers' crew on wheels, so Miss Fatima can see the trade from the seat of a runabout built for two."

When Jim Stubb returned from the bank, where he'd just interned some Canadian quarters an' dimes, along with a sprinklin' of no protest checks an' drafts, he said:

"Sam, take a run down to the new store of the Bradt Drug Co., on North Pearl. They've put in a pile of changes since the Morris Drug went out. And their opening last Saturday was so successful that they are assured of a substantial prosperity in this new location."

Sam Ash went out to take a look at Bradt's, and he met Chris Bittel at Pearl and State. "Mr. Ash," hailed Chris, "look out for more changes in the cigarette situation. Not that Murad, Mogul, Helmar, or any other Lorillard brand is about to raise again, but it's wise to be prepared to maintain staple stocks on this material during these times of rapid price movements. As the Boy Scouts say, 'Be Prepared.'"

And, while out for the ramble, Sam Ash got into Green street, coming out at Hudson avenue. There, on the corner, a big 24-sheet bill-board caught his eye.

It was an ad for a popular corn-syrup, but the body of the copy had been torn out by the March wind, exposing a nicely centered package of Shields & Son's Blue Line tobacco, which had been the previous litho.

But it was the suggestion of the torn sheet which focused Sam's eye. For, there it said, "Saves Sugar"—merely indicating Albany's favorite smoking long-cut as the substitute for both syrup and that other original sugar-saver—Bull Durham.

"Oh! didn't she ramble, ramble?
She rambled all around, all around the town;
Oh! didn't she ramble, ramble,
She rambled 'til the butcher cut her down!"

Singin' this parody from noon to noon, an' from one daylight savin' morn 'til th' nex' 'lectric savin' night, is th' perm'nent job of George Ellison now!

You see, it was this way: Benny was out sweepin' th' concrete in front of th' store of Stubb & Ash when he heard a terribul clatter. Rushin' up ter th' corner, where th' noise clamored, Benny saw a sight which froze his blud.

Yessir, there in th' cellar o' Pike & Capron's place, right on th' edge of State and Lodge streets, where all Albany goes ev'ry day for a cocoa-cola an' a good segar, right there was a boisterous turbulence th' like of which Benny had never lissened to since he dropped a careless cent in a phunnygraf long, long ago!

Why, it sounded like the seventy sirens on Fire-Chief Bridgeford's red-rumble, tryin' to buck up against th' roars of gun-battery in a Flanders fight.

So, Benny, keyed up to battle-pitch, got down on his han's an' knees fer a lookin' view in th' cellar. An' what he saw 'most overplayed what he heard. For, there in th' movie-light was his fren' George Ellison fightin' fer life.

That's right—jest as stated an' printed. Becuz George wuz down there in th' trench reachin' aroun' fer a mazda ter git more radiance on th' scene, while at th' same time he was lambastin' som'thin' back there in th' gloom.

An' upstairs, on th' stairs, in th' store, an' all 'round th' corner wuz a reg'lar score-card mob, urgin' George ter swat 'im agin, swat 'im agin!

Quite ev'dently George wuz cert'anly makin' a supreme effort ter do that lil' thing. Fer, from th' whacks, bangs an' mingled uproariousness, George wuz really succeedin' in holdin' his own.

But th' willin' volunteers on th' stairs an' all over th' Pike & Capron house didn't seem ter be 'specially anxious to chip in an' assist him' th' grapple in th' murk. No, they simply stood 'round on one foot or two, swayin' this way an' that accordin' ter th' surge of th' shouts!

Not that there wuzn't brave men an' true right present. Fer there wuz Man'ger Pete De Groot, hero of many a scrap—uv paper! An' there, too, wuz Joey, an' Bill, an' goodness knows how many uv th' backroom boys ready there wit' th' wallop!

Still, George wuz way down there in th' dark fightin' it out wit' what sounded lik' Billy Sunday's devil himselfer! Som'one shouted that George at las' had 'em under control, an' sure enuf, it did seem as tho th' noise wuz gittin' weaker an' weaker.

Jest th' same it musta bin at least a hull union-day mor' afore George climbs outa th' cellar, all covered wit' gore. Gracious, what a sight. But what wuz that sneakin' out after him? Wuz it a live beefsteak? Or wuz it a bolsheviki wavin' a drippin' red flag?

Eggless Easter! but 'twas a dog! All that wuz left of a once ugly-beautiful English bull-pup! With his face scratched to radical-red ribbons, an' his body covered wit' chaldeean designs in fancy white-an'-red criss-cross patchwork.

But 'twasn't George th' purp wuz fightin'. It wuz a cat! George heard th'cat a hissin' while he wuz sortin' out som' panetelas an' perfectos. An,' to save th' lil' lady, who had crawled under a nest-box full o' kittens, George had jumped down stairs wit' a scantlin' ter hammer th' barkin' dorg which never bites.

Sorry to relate, tho, th' bull refused ter be urged ter desist, even under th' terrific barrage of George's re-enforcements. For, when th' field-hospital red cross workers entered th' pit, there wuz th' Pike & Capron cat, hors de combat.

An' that's why George is still singin' th' dirge which opens this obituary. Tho, even if George can't register th' xyz notes in th' openin' stanza, he can qualify right readily fer one of those hardy heroe medals which Mister Andy Carnegie awards to all cigar men displayin' extraordinary valor on th' field o'banter.

After seein' such a horribl scene as George Ellison's fight-to-th'-death, Benny had a notion he oughta go to som' good show that night where he could smile a bit.

So, in lookin' over th' program, he sights a notis of his old fren' Richard Carle upter th' Hall. Wit' twenty-eight pennies in his pocket, Benny shoots along ter th' show, jest ter see if Dick Carle wuz still th' spring chicken he uster be in jumpin' jupiter.

But there wuz nawthin' to it, nawthin' to it a-tall. Dick seemed to be laborin under a mistaken idee that he wuz a humorist, lik' Benny. So Benny came away from that place wit'out crackin' th' skin on his parched upper lip. Still, Benny did see his fren' W. V. H. Smith, th' old-time New York dealer, who uster sell at 88 West B'way, laughin' as tho th' Furs an' Frills was a scream of a comikal musicale.

When Sam Ash glanced over his mail this morning, he saw a card from Glens Falls. Turning it over, there was the familiar Eisenlohr Cinco imprint, announcing the approach of Jimmy Stuart to the heart of the Capitol District. Jimmy simply rubber stamped Thursday, March 28, as the date of his apperance, that all.

Then, before Sam could find a single cheque amongst the postal requests for aid to the Belgian Relief, Red Cross, Boy Scouts, Y. M. C. A., Knights o'Columbus, and several other worthy war works, in came a gentleman from Saugerties.

Of course it was Fred Lewis. And he said: "This jobbing game is getting to be a fierce proposition on the once cheaper and profitable cigars. There doesn't seem to be anything in the market, at present, to sell for less than $38 to $43. Even that stuff is somewhat scarce in desirable brands and sizes. But I'm off to Schenectady now just to see how things are over there. I hope thy're better than conditions along the River."

And Sam Ash had occasion to talk with Will Dearstyne over the phone a few minutes later. Perhaps the big South Pearl street distributors could say something to put a little Spring sunshine in the jobbing situation.

But no, the only ray of cheer in the establishment of the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co. came through the new plate glass window, reset at last after numerous delays in arriving at Albany since the infant zephyr kicked it out some weeks ago.

However, Will communicated: "Can't get what we want when we want it. Nothing in sight but money, and that's only second sight."

"I guess those Reynolds fellers are tryin' ter corner th' market on revenue stamps," reckoned Benny, as one of Boss Jordan's men departed from the store of Stubb & Ash with a big order for Camel cigarettes. "Fer they say down there at Winston-Salem that they bought about three an' a-half million dollars' worth in th' short month of February alone. Goin' on that way, they'll use fifty million flyin' eagles for th' internal-blues this year, anyways. An' now they're tryin' to make it even more by pushin' Stud terbaccer in a big nickel package. Tho that feller, who just went out, says Prince Albert will come in ten-cent bags just so soon as th' little sixes are played out."

"Ah, Benny, how are you?" and Metropolitan Fleischmann pushed a fist across th' counter for Benjamin to nibble on. "How are Que Placers going?"

"Cazadorish, cazadorish," repeated Benny, tearin' th' band off one himself, as he rang up Fleischmann's half-dollar on th' N. C. R. "But, say Fleisch, whasmatter wit' th' good nickel cigars you uster have in that there grip?"

"Nothin' doin' on th' five-cent goods, Benny, nothin' a-tall," negatived Fleischmann, settin' down his satchel, an' crossin' his concise tho nimble legs for a brief rest before proceedin' on his jornada up th' hill. "No, we're doing practically nothing with cigars jobbing for less than $43. Everything is now six cents. And they're going up, up. Why, even our old Manila friends are getting scarce. This is evidently the day for ten-cent stuff, else the smoker must accept what he's offered for six or seven cents."

"Gee-ja!" exclaimed Benny, after sellin' a Cinco an' two three-cent stamps to a feller for a dime, forgettin' th' two-cents excess profit in th' noon rush. "This mawnin' I see a Liggett & Myers' man who's now sellin' hams for Armour. You know 'im. It's Myer Azie, an old-time tobacco scout. Well, Myer quit L. & M., goin' in for Chicago Squeal. An' he says he still hankers som' for th' li'l' ol' tobac biz, notwit'standin' that he sold som' 7,000 poun's a-stuff las' week, totalin' $1,596.60!

"That's mor' gran' total for a week than he'd have at th' tobacker line in a long, long time. Yer see, a ham av'rages 'bout 14 poun', an it don't take many ter mak' a lot. Especially jess now, wit' Easter comin' on for stacks a-ham an' eggs. Why, Myer sez as how Armour sold som' six hunnered an' fifty millions worth of goods las' year! An' now, wit' a genuine tobacker salesman helpin' 'im, I don't see why Armour & Azie can't shove that there record right over th' line for three quarters of a billion, jess lik' a Liberty Loan!

"Anyways, Manager Sanders, of th' Albany office, sez to Myer, 'Azie, you'll soon know this biziness like the alphabet.' An' Myer, (replyin' 'propriately), responds, 'Yessir, that's my name, Azie!'"

"Here, Benny!" calls out Sam Ash, throwin' over a big pile a-mail, mostly invoices an' please-remitters, "take this lot down to th' Postoffice now. Government says it'll help a pile if everybody pitches in an' sends th' mail down two or three times daily, instead of waitin' for th' last call at five or six P. M. So get it off!"

"Looks as tho Harry Stearns was workin' along Broadway," observed Benny, when he returned from letter mailing at the Albany Postoffice. "Yeh, Harry's got his Fabula six-center right in th' dead-center of that there concentrated middle window of th' Warner Drug Co. branch. Estabrook & Eaton couldn't hav' a better ad in th' papers than that same space in Doc Warner's place, where th' crowds all go. An' I unnnerstan' Manager Roy Webber is so blame busy tendin' to trade that he don't buy cigars himself any more. He lets Doc Warner look after th' cigar men, unless it happens to be some small quantity he needs right away."

"Say, Mr. Ash," and Benny sang out to th' other end of th' store where Mr. Ash was unpackin' a case of Bolds, "who doyer suppose was askin' about yer yesterday?"

"Perhaps Governor Whitman, Benny—anyone else?" innocently inquired Mr. Ash, as he sorted out an armful of claros an' colorados.

"Naw, 'twasn't Charlie Whitman, Mr. Ash, but it was your old friend Dan Kelley," announced Benny importantly.

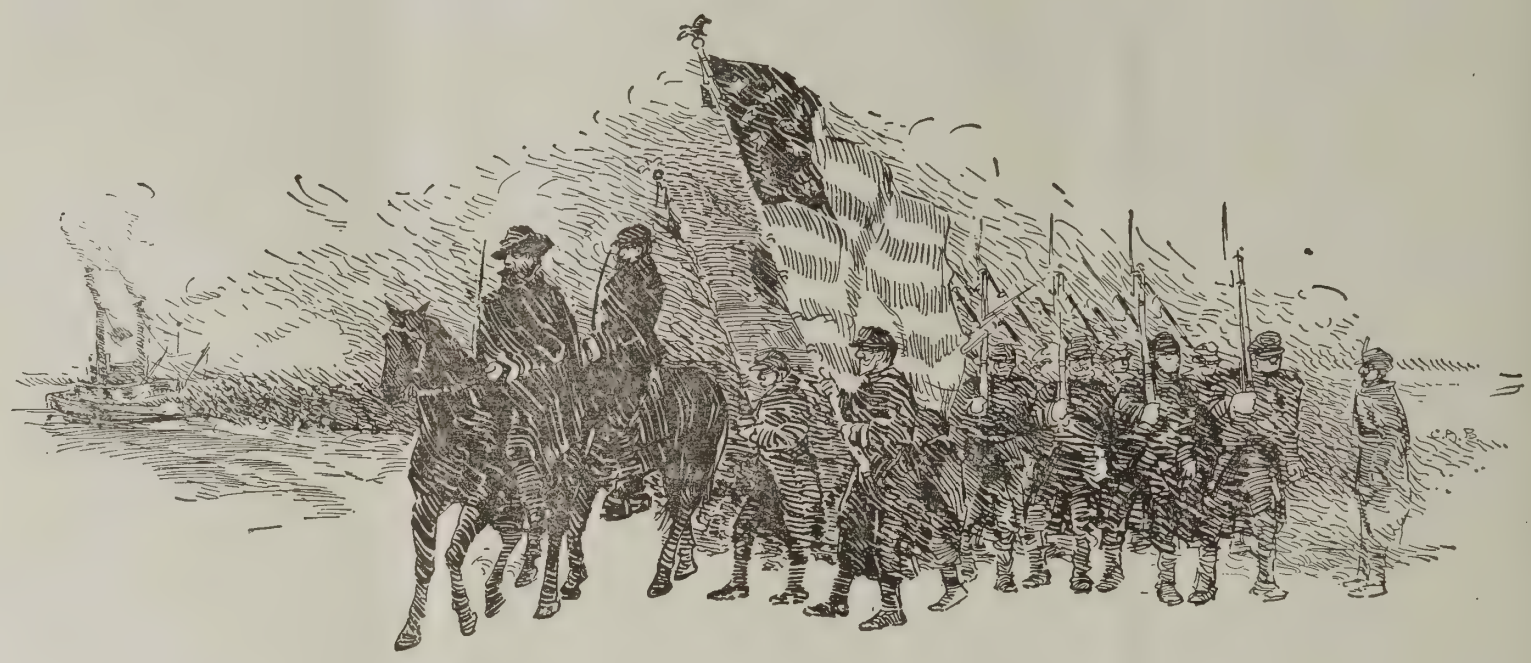
"Kelley, of th' Lorillard Co., eh?" identified Sam Ash immediately, straightenin' his back for a minnit to remove th' bendin'-kink. "And what did Dan have to say?"

"Jess his greetin's, Mr. Ash, tho he did mention, come ter think of it, that Mechanic's Delight long cut is now in Class A wit' th' Monopole high-grade stuff he uster sell befor' th' war knocked th' i outa price!"

"Now that th' indoor basket-ball season is wanin lik' th' snow-bank in our back yard," started Benny, meantime wrappin' an rollin' another sheet of plug-foil on th' Red Cross meltin'-pot ball, "I guess Cheerful Camfield will cease subscribin' ter th' Troy Times.

"Fer Camfield is th' 'riginal lad f'om Troy who took th' y outa tyro an' put it where it belongs in Troy basket-ball.' An' th' newspaper score-card is always an interestin' page to Cam.

"There he sees, day after day, th' records of players who were tyros at th' game when Cam was a star twirler for th' best team in th' Collar City.



"An' it gives Cam a pain to see som' of these imitashun players croquet th' ball thru th' wickets as tho they were actshully engaged in th' real game!

"Why, Cam learned to play basket-ball in Schaghticoke when Velvet Joe was still studyin' philosophee down there on Folsom avenue, Saint Looie.

"Then, jess as a token of appreciashun, th' Elks offered Cam a life membership if he'd come over an' jine their team! But he wouldn't an' didn't. No, sir; Cam stuck ter Troy 'til Liggett & Myers came along with Velvet. Since which Cam has plugged, day in an' day out, jess as hard sellin' L. & M. products as he uster play tossin' th' puddin' fer th' Schaghticoke Savages!"

"If this yere weather keeps up," reasoned Benny, lookin' outa th' open-door at th' robin in th' gutter, "I reckon M. A. Schufeldt will be Bold enuf to lay off his rubbers an' overshoes. He'll save som'thin' too, fer th' way he walks 'round here he must buy a pair a week, easy!"

THE SMOKER.

WHEN THE BOYS CAME HOME IN "65"

Manila cigars then held a firm place on the American Market. SIX and NINE cents were popular prices for smokes at the close of the Civil War, and Manilas sold for exactly the same money—size for size—as the Imported Havanas.

High Tariffs, made necessary by the public debt and the cost of war, excluded Manila cigars from the United States until Free Trade was again established with the Philippine Islands in 1910. SINCE THEN THAT TRADE HAS GROWN FROM 67,261,-545, IMPORTED IN 1915, TO 215,693,368 IN 1917.

EMPEY TO GET TOBACCO FOR THE BOYS.

An entertainment which is certain to net large profits, both artistic and financial for the Sun Tobacco Fund is a joint affair arranged for next Friday evening by Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey and the management of the Campus restaurant, Columbus avenue and 104th street, New York. Sergeant Empey is one of the champion smoke fund boosters. His appeals at a number of his thrilling war lectures have brought thousands of dollars to the enterprise. Sales of autographed copies of his books too have been productive of big profits at entertainments where the soldier could not be present in person.

On Friday night Mr. Empey will give one of his best talks for soldiers' smokes and he will also sell at auction an autographed copy of his book, "The First Call." Besides this outstanding feature, a varied and excellent programme is being arranged by Manager Henry Gossler of the Campus and Miss Nellie Hayes, who will be hostess of the evening. Many handsome donations already made are even now on exhibition in the main dining room. These articles will all be sold at auction for the fund's benefit on Friday evening.

REDUCES COST OF SHIP INSURANCE.

It is evidence of the strongest kind of the effectiveness of the American Navy that Secretary McAdoo is again able to reduce the war-risk insurance rates.

The present reduction on hulls and cargoes through the war zone is from 4 per cent to 3 per cent; the reduction on the officers, masters, and crews of merchant vessels through the war zone is from 50 cents to 25 cents per hundred dollars of pay roll. Both reductions take effect March 18, 1918.

The first reduction of insurance rates by the War Risk Insurance Bureau was made last October, when the rate on cargoes was reduced from 6½ per cent to 5 per cent. The second reduction was on November 23, and was from 5 per cent to 4 per cent.

One of the most valuable uses of the Liberty Loan is to render possible this war-risk insurance on the cargoes and men on our merchant ships voyaging through the war zone. Under the protection of this insurance hundreds of millions of dollars of American commerce has been enabled to seek and reach foreign markets.

The reduction in the insurance rate, the rates steadily decreasing as American preparedness increases, speaks in most convincing tones of American efficiency. There is a not inconsiderable number of well-informed men, and they are not all Americans by any means, who believe that the American gunners have not quite their equals in the navies of the world.

A Record Cigar Shipment From Havana

Steamer Morro Castle Carried 928 Cases Containing 6,463,605 Cigars—French Regie a Big Buyer—Henry Clay & Bock & Co. Had 1,617,025 Cigars in One Consignment to Paris—Factories Busy Making Smokes for American Troops —Garcia & Vega Purchase a Notable Quantity of Excellent Vuelta Abajo Leaf—Predictions Concerning the Remedios Crop.

HAVANA, March 22.—Exports of cigars, per S. S. Morro Castle totaled 928 cases, containing 6,463,605 cigars, which were consigned as follows, viz.: To France, 4,597,025; to United States, 1,029,375; to Great Britain, 389,525; to Australia, 208,250; to Canada, 132,750; to British Africa, 49,000; to Belgium, 32,000; to Uruguay, 15,000; to Brazil, 10,180, and to Nicaragua, 500 cigars.

On this trip the Morro Castle carried, it is believed, the biggest and most valuable cargo of cigars that ever left Havana.

Of the 4,597,025 cigars shipped to New York for transshipment to France, the French minister here consigned 2,980,000 to the French regie, and Henry Clay & Bock & Co., Ltd., sent 1,617,025 to the distributors for the company in Paris.

Report is also that Charles Landau & Co. have orders for large quantities of cigars, to be delivered to the Quartermaster's Department of the U. S. Army.

Romeo y Julieta, working, as active as ever, made an additional purchase recently of 388 bales of Vuelta Abajo vegas, in order to have enough leaf on hand for two years to come.

Partagas, also fully occupied executing orders, has added 468 bales of Vuelta Abajo to the large holdings of choice leaf, which Cifuentes Pego & Co. have.

Punch announces that the United States representative of the factory, August Kuttnauer, handed in his resignation. It was accepted with regret. In the meantime, while no new representative has been appointed, importers in the United States may communicate with the factory direct, or to the owner, Don Manuel Lopez, Rayo 28, Havana. Punch has good orders.

Belinda has received orders from Great Britain amounting to a million cigars, and also is busy on orders from the United States.

Hoyo de Monterrey is working as usual for the United States as well as for several other countries.

Juan Diaz Inguanzo, the owner of the El Rey del Mundo cigar factory, recently purchased 905 bales of Vuelta Abajo.

Calixto Lopez & Co. have also good orders for the American army in France, and are very busy in other directions.

C. del Peso & Co. (Flor de Tomas Gutierrez) have an order for 380,000 cigars for the Cuban Red Cross in France.

Business on the leaf market is restricted, because of the small stocks for sale. Not until the new crop reaches market can we hope for livelier times. Prices are firm for the remaining Vuelta Abajo vegas, and the little which is left of Remedios, but Partido wrappers and resagos are "soft" in price. It is said that some dealers have accepted losses from $50 to $100 per bale, in order to save capital invested, which goes to show that "all is not gold that glitters."

Sales during the last two weeks totaled 5,673 bales, consisting of: Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta, 3,566; Partido, 498, and Remedios, 1,609 bales.

Buyers were: American, 1,442; exporters to South America, 1,970, and local manufacturers of cigars and cigarettes, 2,261 bales.

As we have had good rains, nearly every day this week, all over the island, some of the plants in the fields yet in the Vuelta Abajo may be benefited, although most people claim that the rains have come too late to do any good. But, to be sure, the rains in the Santa Clara province have helped the growth of capaduras materially, and there is no telling yet what the total of the Remedios crop in bales may be. There have been circulated some exaggerated reports, yet it appears certain that the 1918 crop will be the biggest in the history of Remedios. The unsolved riddle is the question of prices, and it will require a great deal of tact and shrewdness to harmonize the pretensions of the vegueros with the ideas of packers. Reliable packers fully appreciate the risks they are running by paying too much money for bundled tobacco; therefore they are going to operate very cautiously. For, besides the first cost of the leaf, there may be trouble ahead with the labor organizations; workmen may ask considerably higher wages; palm bast, cords for strapping the bales and the silk bast for the carrots are scarce and have risen in price, and cartages and railroad freights, as well as the cost of shipping on coastwise steamers, will undoubtedly be higher than last year. Under these circumstances the cost of packing and delivering bales to warehouses in Havana is a thing to be taken into consideration by leaf dealers. Besides, the question is what the American cigar manufacturers will do, later on? Will they stock up early and in large quantities, or will they try to buy sparingly, getting only such leaf as they absolutely require. If prices are reasonable, they may buy early and largely. But if prices seem abnormally high, they will undoubtedly hold back and pur-

Dealers Are Pushing Sure Things In Chicago

A Lot of Sidelights on Spring Trade

CHICAGO, March 22.—City trade is showing a marked improvement and warm weather has helped to liven business. Now that the dealers can keep their doors open, they expect to strike a selling gait that will show a big gain over last spring's business.

Surprises have been many of late. Al Belmont, who was cigar manager for the wholesale house of McNeill & Higgins, has resigned. Belmont expects to close with another house and will remain in the cigar business.

John Collins, of Ohio Flats fame, is around town telling the dealers that Ohio Flats will soon be put up in bundles of three and retail for 10 cents. Each bundle will have an attractive band around it. John will leave April 1 for an extended tour, taking in the states of Iowa, Illinois and Ohio.

In all of the retail stores of Albert Breitung, the Windsor Castle Fags created by P. Lorillard Co. are displayed on the counters. They are packed "4 and 20" smokes for 20 cents.

Schulte's stores are now selling Romeo Garcia, the mild Havana cigar made by Harris-Schwarz Co., Inc., of New York.

Fred Oakes, the Gato man, put over his big deal a few days ago. Ruhstrat-Cowley Co., cigar jobbers, will distribute the Gato brand in three sizes, likewise Gato Keywesters in the Favorita shape. The opening order was a pippin, and Fred was greatly pleased on landing such a desirable account.

S. R. Poe has already booked many orders for Perfecto Garcia and Bros. La Amita clear Havana brand, on which he is working exclusively. Poe says they sell on sight. His territory takes in the United States. He will take to the road shortly.

The new packing of In-B-Tweens is arriving. They come in foil packages of five and retail for 25 cents. Twenty packages are packed in a neat tin box.

Leo Abraham, a well known retail merchant, jobber and manufacturer, Milwaukee, was here on important business.

Walter Fleckles is back in town. He came here from St. Louis. He says that last week was one of the biggest weeks he ever had since he has been selling San Felice and El Verso cigars.

Ed. Fisch, the Loop and South Side man, also Charles Blanchard, who worked the North Side trade for McNeil & Higgins, have resigned. They will stay in the selling game and are about to close with another well-known house.

Tom Gato, of the E. H. Gato Cigar Co., is expected here this week to go over important matters with Fred Oakes.

Marc Haas, of Haas Bros., is in town conferring with Harvey Young, the Chicago representative of Haas Bros.

Shoemaker & Co., at their store in the Ashland Block, have a fine Mozart display. Manager Harry Penney says they are catching on in great shape.

Bull Durham is now 6 cents. The package is three-quarters of an ounce. Some "Bull" is sold in Chicago.

J. B. Bevill is back at his Chicago office, after completing a trip as far as the coast. Bevill represents the American Tobacco Co.

Condax maximums with straw tips sell at 5 cents each. They are packed in cedar boxes of 50 cigarettes each.

Eger & Co., at 53 East Adams street, have a large glass Egyptian Deities sign up in front of their store.

In all of Schulte's cases the M. A. C. cigar is displayed in many sizes. They are made in Milwaukee by Leo Abraham Co. The 10-cent Breva size in selling strong at present.

Unger Cigar Co., at 47th and Indiana avenue, are featuring the Romeo-Garcia brand. Nathan Unger is the owner of this busy corner store.

Chas. Isaacson and Mr. Many, of Many-Blanc Co., jobbers and manufacturers, are expected back from Havana shortly, where they have been on a leaf buying trip.

Websters have gone up in price. Sprague, Warner & Co., the Chicago distributors, have this leading brand in all the good stores.

E. Jacobson is now working the Loop trade for William A. Vorhauer & Co., jobbers. The dealers know Jake well, as he was, up to a few weeks ago, manager of the cigar department of Chapin & Gore, who have retired from business.

Fuller-Morrison Co., the wholesale druggists, are getting a big distribution on the well-known Perfecto Garcia brand. Mr. Hoover is placing them all over the city.

Ruhstrat-Crowley Co. put out the J. R., a big jitney smoker. J. R.'s are seen in many cases.

Albert Breitung is offering the Belvidere 10-for-15-cent short smoke made by Reeder & Co., of New York.

J. Harry McMahon, known to all the city trade as a cigarette and cigar salesman, is now selling life insurance and is meeting with much success.

Chicago has a new cigar jobbing and manufacturing firm. El Treeo Cigar Co. (not inc.) has entered the field with headquarters at 116 North La Salle street. They will feature El Treeo, a mild Havana cigar. The firm is composed of R. E. McCabe and Paul D. Little, both well known cigar men.

The Best & Russell retail store at La Salle and Jackson Boulevard, will be given up on May 1.

A large made-up window display sign is being placed with the trade by the Ruhstrat-Crowley Co. It is gotten up in fine style and bears the ad of Charles Denby 6-cent cigars.

Murad cigarettes are leaping high in sales. The fine half-page ads that are now appearing in all the daily papers are doing wonders for this brand.

All the Clayton Cigar Co.'s cases are showing several sizes of Paramount cigars. A steady sale is being worked up on this new comer in the House of Clayton.

Ben Lesser, of the Havana Production Co., has returned to Chicago from a road trip that took him as far West as Omaha. Business is good with Ben, and the Dulce brand has a wide distribution.

Ever heard of a cigar man being a pool shark? Well, we have one here in the person of Harry Penny, who won the honors of "champ" over Ed. Frisch. The game was played for charity at Benzinger's billiard parlors, and Harry is now known as the "champion of the green cloth." The proceeds were donated to the Red Cross.

Spartan Blunts are the big sellers with Walter Bloch's box trade. They still retail at $5 per 100.

Roman Dobler, having supplied his Chicago trade with the various brands of Park & Tilford, has left for a road trip. Roman will take in Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and the upper half of Michigan, and will be gone for some time.

Oscar Buxbaum, one of Milwaukee's leading exclusive cigar jobbers, paid the trade here a call. He spent some time at the office of Perfecto Garcia & Bros., whose goods he handles in large quantities. Clark Cutler also had him in tow, and we may hear that Oscar has taken on Moises Bustillo & Co.'s line.

Harry L. Harris, of Harris-Schwarz Co., has returned from a highly ssuccessful trip to the Twin Cities. Twenty-one stores now carry his brands in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

The last meeting of the Chicago Cigar Dealers' Association, held at their hall in the Masonic Temple, was attended by many members.

Mr. Davies, Mr. Jones and Mr. Morrison, well known trade organizers, roused those present to the needs and benefits of organization. Other speakers were Mr. Schrader, S. M. Bernstein and Harry Cohn. Those present paid their dues for the balance of the year. A general meeting will be held at the association headquarters March 26 or 27, when it is hoped that a great many new members will be secured. John Weber, the present acting secretary and treasurer, has been devoting much of his time toward getting dealers interested.

The national cigarette service committee, with headquarters in the Brownleigh Club, Stevens Building, have begun forwarding weekly shipments of cigarettes to men from Chicago in the trenches in France. The committee, of which Mrs. Edith Nilsson is chairman and Mrs. Louise C. E. Snow vice chairman, will wrap and send cigarettes for friends or relatives of the boys at the front. Names of soldiers who have no one to send them "smokes" are wanted.

Tom Moores are going to climb in price on April 1. They will go to $75 for the 10-cent size, and $90 for the 2 for 25-cent size. Tom Moore is a big local seller. Little Tom will remain in the 5-cent class, and the price will remain the same, namely $37.50.

Girards are winning many friends with the trade of Iwan Ries & Co., who distribute them in this field. At their retail store, 104 North Wells street, a big showing of Girards is now made.

Statesman from Jeitles & Blumenthal have a big window display at the Stock Exchange cigar store. They still retail at 5 cents. Manager White has stretched a point in making this display, for it is one of the finest ever seen in the windows of this popular store.

WISCONSIN NOTES

EDGERTON, Wis., March 22.—This has been the big week of the season for deliveries of the tobacco crop at various receiving points in the State, and the market towns have been crowded with hundreds of farmers' teams daily, and farmers are rapidly converting their holdings into cash. The farmer who does not carry away from one to five thousand dollars for this product is not considered much of a grower this year. It is estimated that close to three-quarters of the crop will be received by the close of the present week. There is some stripping yet to be completed, but generally growers have the crop ready and await their turn for delivery. The difficulty in securing cars for transshipment as promptly as needed is delaying the movement somewhat.

The warehouse handling is being pushed along now with the usual despatch, work being in sight for several weeks yet. A few of the Vernon County packers have already completed the work of the season.

The old goods market is barren of transactions.

The shipments out of storage to eastern factories is still confined to small orders, the embargo on car loads for connecting lines being still in force.—Edgerton Reporter.

In a terse letter to the president of a big life insurance company, who had written a disparaging article for a New York newspaper on the Government's insurance at cost for the nation's fighting forces. Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo promptly throws down this challenge: "If a propaganda against the War Risk Bureau is beginning, I shall be very happy to meet it. Such a propaganda may produce many beneficial effects in widening the field of the War Risk Insurance Bureau's activities."

Strike of Tobacco Workers in St. Louis Is Settled

A Wage Increase of Ten Per Cent. Is Granted—The Position Taken by the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. Well Shown in a Letter to Oscar F. Nelson, Commissioner of Conciliation—Cigars Shipped by General Cigar Co. to Denver Stolen En Route—Three Men Arrested for Looting Freight Cars—Ernest Miller, Formerly with Judge & Dolph, Goes to the Parker Gordon Cigar Co.

St. Louis, March 23.—The strike of 3,500 employes of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. has been settled. The workers, who walked out March 11, returned to work yesterday morning. Under the terms of settlement, which was effected through the efforts of Oscar F. Nelson, Commissioner of Conciliation of the United States Department of Labor, the employes get a 10 per cent increase in wages, in addition to a previous increase amounting to 30 per cent in the last two years, and the working day is shortened from 10 to 9 hours. No recognition to the union is given, but the company promises to make no discrimination against any employe for belonging to any organization.

The position of the company is made clear in the following letters:

"Mr. Oscar F. Nelson, Commissioner of Conciliation, United States Department of Labor, St. Louis.

"Dear Sir:

"That there may be no misunderstanding or question about the position of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., we make the following statement to you in writing, as the representative of the government.

"We are ready now, as always have been, to meet our employes—either as a voluntary committee of such employes, or we are willing to meet a committee of our employes selected or designated by you—to discuss with them wages or working conditions. You must, however, distinctly understand that the union will not in any way be recognized; that the meeting and discussion above referred to is to be only with our employes as such.

"We will take back in our employ all of those persons who were employed by us on February 26, 1918, except such as may have been guilty of acts of violence to our other employes, or to our property. Our employes may return to their former places at once, and full operation will be resumed as speedily as possible.

"Wage questions and working conditions in the various departments will be considered immediately upon the return of our employes to work, and as soon as their complaints shall have been presented to E. T. Noland, Jr., General Manager.

"We have neither sought nor invited this strike. We regret it. Less than thirty days ago we voluntarily increased the wages of our employes ten per cent, thus making a total increase of thirty per cent in wages and earnings of our employes within the last two years.

"We beg to assure you of our appreciation of your interest in this matter.

"Respectfully, T. T. Anderson, Vice-president."

"To Employes of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.:

"We confirm statement made today to several of our employes who came to us upon the suggestion of Oscar F. Nelson, Representative of Conciliation of the United States Department of Labor:

"With the understanding that our employes return to work immediately, it has been decided—effective March 21, 1918, that the company will change the schedule of working hours from 10 to 9 hours per day, and increase the present rate of pay 10 per cent.

"It is distinctly understood that the union will not in any way be recognized.

"We will not discriminate against any employe on account of belonging to any organization.

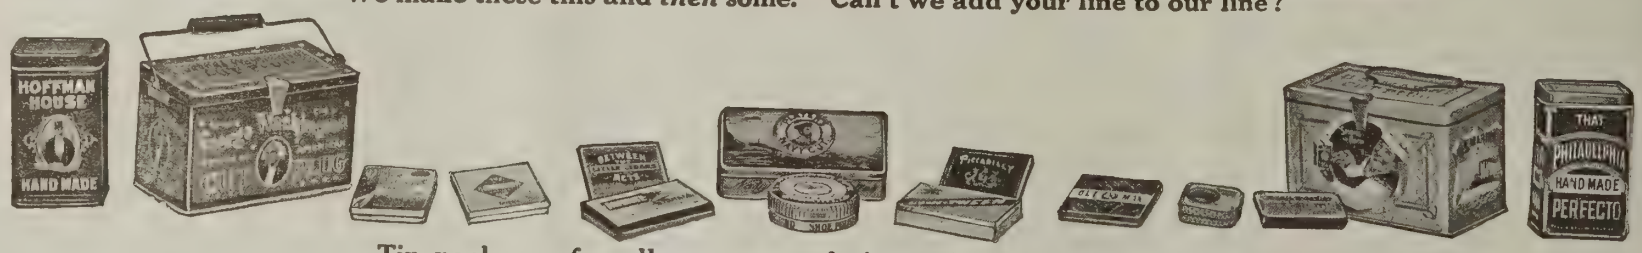
"Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.,
"E. T. Noland, General Manager."

It is expected that the plant will be in full operation by Monday.

Ten thousand cigars which were seized by detectives in a saloon have been identified as part of a shipment from the General Cigar Co., South Bethlehem, Pa., to Denver, Colo. The cigars had been taken from a freight car, and, as it was an interstate shipment, three men who have been arrested have been held for the Federal authorities.

Ernest Miller, who has been with Judge & Dolph for the last fourteen years, has resigned as assistant manager of the cigar department, and has been appointed city salesman for the Parker-Gordon Cigar Co. Miller is one of the best-known retail cigar salesmen in St. Louis.

Edmonds.



Victor Tannenholtz has bought the interest of his brothers in the store on 38th street and Sixth avenue, New York. He takes charge on April 1. Harold Tannenholtz is getting ready to join his brother Melville in the National Army at an early date.

Boston Smokers Stick to Nickel Cigars

The Practice of Many Retailers Retards Sales of Six and Seven Centers—Harry Wilson Does Well with E. C. Hall & Co. at Brockton—Mahoney Makes an Excellent Showing for Manuel in New Bedford and Fall River—Saloon Closing in Newport Causes Loss of Business.

BOSTON, March 26.—The six cent cigar is not a success in Boston, and will not be as long as the trade can buy Pippins and Totems, two of the biggest sellers, made locally and heavily advertised as five cent cigars. Not until the makers of these two brands boost their prices to over $40 per thousand, will the retailers sell at more than a nickel. From the manner in which these brands are being advertised, one is led to believe that it is not the intent of the manufacturers to boost prices until they are compelled to use the tobaccos that they paid the higher prices for, and it is understood that they have large stocks of tobacco purchased at low figures.

In the meantime, outside brands of nickel cigars that were raised to six and seven cents, naturally have dropped in sale; some are selling, but not so briskly as they did before the war.

In Springfield, Mass., it is reported that the retailers got together and agreed to sell all erstwhile nickel cigars, irrespective of present cost, at five cents. Understand they are selling just as many as they did at six cents.

Retail conditions during the past week have showed real activity. Weather permitting the doors open, has done much to improve trade.

Harry Wilson, well known in tobacco circles, now is in charge of the cigar department of E. C. Hall Co., Brockton, Mass., the largest wholesale grocers on the North Shore. Since Mr. Wilson assumed charge January 1, he has promoted the sales to large figures.

E. C. Hall Co. are distributing the Fendrich and Charles Denby Cigars of H. Fendrich; Massoit. Las Palmas of the Manila Commercial Co., practically all the popular brands of cigarettes. They handle lots of cigars and tobaccos.

Willson Bros. retailers, are moving to larger quarters on Main street, Brockton, Mass.

The trade in Newport, R. I., is feeling blue because of the recent order, closing all places where liquor is sold. This affects jobbers materially, as "wet" resorts were big buyers of cigars.

The Hotel Men's Association of New Hampshire held their Annual Meeting at the Laconia Tavern, Laconia, N. H. last Saturday. Ginita Cigars of Charles B. Perkins Co. Boston, were served at the banquet.

Joseph P. Manning Co. had a crew of salesmen, working the Cape Cod section last week on the Fort Hill, Union Made nickel cigar, that has become a big winner.

Hubbell & McGowan, at corner of Massachusetts avenue and Huntington avenue, has a full window display of Kelley's Bouquet cigars, distributed by the Commonwealth Cigar Co.

Oscar D. Dutton, who has been with Frederick L. Roberts, the Central street retailer and jobber for a number of years, resigned recently to accept a responsible position with an insurance company. His many friends wish him success in his new connection.

Max Alexander of the Commonwealth Cigar Co. recently returned from a trip covering New Hampshire and Vermont, booking some big orders on El Roi Tans, Kelley's Bouquets and Chancellor cigars.

George Melhado of George Melhado & Co., the Roxbury, Mass., retailers and jobbers, was in New York City last week.

W. D. Walker of the cigar department of S. S. Pierce Co., is on his regular Western Trip.

John Mack, of the Goodwin Drug Co., Hartford, Conn. was a recent trade visitor.

Frank Mahoney, representing Allen R. Cressman Sons Co. has been working New Bedford and Fall River, Mass. recently, pushing the Flor de Manuel, ten cent cigar. Albert Mailhout, manager of the cigar department of Browne's Pharmacy, New Bedford, Mass. says the Flor de Manuel is one of his leaders.

Sigmund Weiss, proprietor of the London Pipe Shops, Newport, N. H., is drilling the local constabulary. Every one addresses him as Colonel now.

Moe Baker, of sales force of Baker Bros., the Broad street jobbers, so soon as he gets through his work, attends evening high school, plugging good and hard, and making wonderful progress.

Dubonnets, Ranchos and Strathmores of the American Exchange Cigar Co. are now on sale in many of the Forts in Boston Harbor, Plattsburg Barracks, Plattsburg, New York, Fort Adams, Fort Greble, Newport, and Fort Constitution, Portsmouth, N. H.

Mike Tiereney, of the Falk Tobacco Co. has done some wonderful work placing Herbert Tareyton cigarettes, Herbert Tareyton mixture and Serene Mixture, around the different camps in New England. Mike was a commissary Sergeant during the Spanish War, and he knows how to go after the business and get it.

"The coming year presents many unusual problems which can be satisfactorily solved by each doing his best."

In Favor of Immediate Development of Water Power

Result of Vote Taken by U. S. Chamber of Commerce

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 27.—By sweeping majorities 500,000 business executives, who comprise the membership of the United States Chamber of Commerce today, adopted resolutions calling on Congress to make provisions for harnessing the millions in water horse power that now run wild.

The vote was taken through the more than 1,000 commercial organizations throughout the country which compose the National Chamber. Forty-five states, Alaska and Hawaii participated in the balloting, representing a wide range of industrial interests and opinions and reliably indicating to Congress how the business men of the nation look on the water power situation. Each voting organization cast from one to ten votes, depending on its membership.

The balloting was based on a series of recommendations contained in the report of the Committee on Water Power Development of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce. These recommendations were presented.

1.—That federal legislation encouraging the development of water powers should at once be enacted—adopted by the almost unanimous vote of 1324 to 6.

2.—That authority to grant permits should be vested in an administrative department. Carried by a vote of 1253 to 17.

3.—That the permit period should be at least fifty years, any shorter period being at the applicant's option. In favor 1216, opposed 42.

4.—That tolls should attach only to use of public lands or benefits derived from headwater improvements. Adopted by vote of 1191½ to 40½.

5.—That permittees should be entitled to acquire the right to use public lands forming only a small and incidental part of the development. Carried by a vote of 1210 to 25.

6.—That recapture should be exercised only upon payment of fair and just compensation. In favor 1234, opposed 25.

7.—That if recapture is not exercised, the investment of the permittee should be adequately protected. Adopted by vote 1226 to 26.

8.—That rates and service should be regulated by state commissions where the service is intrastate, with federal regulation only where several states are directly concerned and do not agree, or there is no state commission. Carried by a vote of 1177 to 57.

9.—That if any jurisdiction to regulate the issuance of securities is exercised it should be solely by the state. In favor 1114, opposed 117.

10.—That no preference should be granted as between applicants amounting to a subsidy from the government creating unequal competition. Adopted by a vote of 1191 to 38.

The Committee which drew up the report and presented the resolutions was composed as follows:

L. S. Gillette, chairman, engineer and manufacturer, Minneapolis; Harry A. Black, wholesale merchant, Galveston; Rome G. Brown, Lawyer, Minneapolis; Henry S. Drinker, President Lehigh University; Frank P. Glass, Editor-in-chief, Birmingham News; E. K. Hall, Lawyer, New York City; Horace C. Henry, retired railway contractor, Seattle; Henry L. McCune, Lawyer, Kansas City; Samuel V. Stewart, Lawyer and banker, Virginia City, Mont., and governor of Montana; George F. Swain, Civil Engineer, Boston; and C. F. Weed, Lawyer and banker, Boston.

While the Committee's report is in itself favorable to positive legislation to enlarge water-power development, every ballot sent out was accompanied by an argument in the negative which clearly and positively set forth objections to the recommendations so that those voting had at hand data on which to base their judgment for or against.

UNITED STATES EXPORTS IN FEBRUARY.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—American exports for February totaled $412,000,000, as compared with $505,000,000 for January according to a statement issued today by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce. Exports for the eight months ended with February were valued at $3,857,000,000 as against $4,083,000,000 for the corresponding period of the pervious year.

Imports for February are placed at $208,000,000, a decrease from the $235,000,000 announced for January. For the eight months ended with February the imports totaled $1,841,000,000, as compared with $1,548,000,000 for the corresponding period of 1917.

Gold imports in February amounted to $2,500,000, against $4,400,000 in January, and gold exports are given as $5,000,000, against the $3,700,000 the previous month.

John D. Rockefeller it is said, will pay eight million dollars this year in income taxes.

Dealers Are Eager to Get Manilas

Reports Received from the Philippines Cause a Scramble for Goods in San Francisco—A Rise in Cigarette Prices—Retailers Are Stocking Up Heavily—Lucky Strike Making a Big Hit on the Pacific Coast—Dwyer Protests—Bert Manley Joins Goss Sales Force.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20.—The report that the 1917 crop of Manila tobacco has been almost a total failure has been confirmed by letters received this week from Manila, and as a result those dealers who had hoped to build up a large clientage for Manila cigars, which they could sell at prices much lower than those made of other tobacco, are feeling despondent. It is said that Manila leaf and fillers have already advanced 15 per cent, and that higher prices all long the line will be made in a short time. The 1916 crop is being sought, and the holders are getting higher prices than ever before in their history. Unseasonable weather is said to have caused the damage to the 1917 crop. The demand for Manila cigars in this city has been enormous since the general advance of tobacco prices, and some of the dealers fear that the trade will be killed by the material advances which will doubtless be made for Manilas in the near future.

The price of Natural and Melachrino cigarettes have been advanced $2 per thousand wholesale. At the same time the United Cigar Stores Co. has announced the following new prices on cigarettes to take place April 2: Marquise, Murad, Mogul, Makaroff, Egyptian Luxuries, Egyptian Unis, Melachrino No. 9, and Schinasi Naturals in cork, plain or straw tip, 10 for 18 cents, 20 for 25 cents, 50 for 85 cents and 16 for 28 cents; 100 are to be sold for $1.70. Turkish Trophies, Helmar and Egyptian Straights, cork or plain, are to be sold as follows: 10 for 13 cents, 20 for 25 cents, 50 for 60 cents, and 100 for $1.20. Tobacco also is showing an advance. Velvet, Tuxedo and other similar brands will sell at 13 cents, and Prince Albert at 15 cents.

The retailers are scared at the upward tendency of the market on all grades and brands of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco, and they are buying up to the limit on those things which have not yet advanced. This has made a very lively business for the wholesaler and distributor, but it also means the loading up of the retailer to a fuller stock than he should carry. It would not be surprising if some of them should buy beyond their means as a result of the scare, with disastrous results in the future. So far the distributors say, however, that cash sales have been unusually large and all remittances unusually prompt.

The Lucky Strike cigarette, which is comparatively new in this market, is proving very popular and its sales are said to show a marvelous increase.

The American Tobacco Co. has discontinued its drop shipments to the principal cities of this coast, but is continuing them to the various cantoments and the smaller places for the present.

R. Landucci, who has conducted a retail store at the corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets for some time past, has sold out his place of business to Ed. Goldstine. Mr. Landucci took this step in order that he might enter the navy of his Uncle Sam.

H. L. Judell says that one great trouble among the retailers is that they are looking for cheap goods when there are no more cheap goods on the market. This, however, does not bother the Judell company so much, as it has never handled the cheapest grades, but goes in for standard goods and service. As an example of the latter the company recently paid nearly $3.00 per thousand for the express charges on a shipment of In-B-Tween, in order to get the goods for an old customer.

"Mollie" Hull is still in San Francisco pushing the Tom Moore. "Mollie" has a smooth way with him that few can resist and the sales of this popular cigar are reported to be jumping.

I. I. Hess, of Optimo fame, is back in town from a very successful trip in the southern part of the State. The sun has been shining in San Francisco since he returned.

Bert Manley, for a long time factory representative of the Havana American Co., selling the Belmont cigar, has resigned his position to accept a connection with the firm of E. Goss & Co. Mr. Manley is rapidly increasing the number of accounts on the books of his new employers.

J. C. Chuck, the Frankel, Gerdts & Co., representative, has been working the Bay towns for the past week and will leave for Eureka next week in the interest of La Natividad and El Carmino Real cigars.

An interesting visitor to this city during the week was Mrs. Louis Marks of Seattle, who previous to her marriage to the well-known Seattle jobber, had proved herself to be a business woman and writer of ability. She is here on a business trip for her husband. Other out-of-town dealers who visited San Francisco this week were: N. A. Woods, of Vacaville; H. J. Amigo, Reno, Nev.; C. A. Warner, San Rafael; A. Samuel, Fresno; John L. Murphy, Madera; C. Weider, Woodland, and Sam Aaron, Stockton.

Largest independent cigar factory in the world.

GARCIA GRANDE'S undeniable mildness is associated with the distinctive quality of Vuelta Abajo tobacco.

When we originated the Garcia Grande, we gave the world a real mild Havana, a large cigar, a good cigar that could be sold for a moderate price. The Garcia Grande represents the triumph of a new idea.

The Garcia Grande has attained a national distribution, not through extensive advertising, but strictly on its merits. It has developed continually increasing sales in all parts of the country. The fact that it appeals to everyone who likes a mild Havana, makes the Garcia Grande a brand that both the jobber and retailer may depend on for steady business.

EVERYBODY KEPT BUSY

Key West Factories Working to Capacity—Constant Demand for More Cigar Makers.

KEY WEST, Fla., March 22.—Things sure are coming to Key West now. Army officers are in the city for the purpose of selecting a site for a balloon training camp. It is thought that the camp will be placed on the south beach near the Martello towers. This will be the second aeronautical school that the government has established in Key West since the beginning of the war.

Talk about service men being worked up, the navy boys here are keyed up to the highest pitch in anticipation of the base ball game on Saturday. It will be the deciding game of the series between the Key West all stars and the navy nine. Each team is two games to the good, and both are practicing hard. The net proceeds of the game will go to the local chapter of the American Red Cross.

The only fatal accident that has happened at the local air station since the men began to fly here last year, occurred, when Aviator Perkins fell into the gulf and drowned. Rescue boats and hydroplanes went to his aid but arrived too late.

Manager Arnold of the Mi Favorita Ca. is in Havana this week on business. The Mi Favorita Ca. is doing loads of work every week and the only trouble they have had this year has been the scarcity of cigar makers. They are receiving orders from all parts of the country and every week the company's shipments climb higher and higher.

The E. H. Gato Cigar Ca. is doing land office business, being hard pushed to keep up with the orders. This factory could easily utilize the service of a hundred more men. James R. Curry of the Gato force is in Havana this week on business.

The Cortez Ca. is filling up order book after order book, numerous requisitions being received daily. Cortez factories are working as many men as they can get and the buildings are crowded with busy workmen from early morn till late at night.

R. Lopez Trujillo Ca. is working on orders that keep constantly increasing Trujillo smokers.

The S. & F. Fleitas Ca., busy as can be, is receiving orders every day for the new sizes and shapes of the Homerica brand, which is known far and wide for its excellence.

HICKORY NUT.

NICKEL CIGAR DOOMED.

The nickel cigar doom is being written in Canada. The writing is there on the wall for all who care to see, nor is a Daniel needed to interpret the meaning of the message to the retailer and to the ultimate consumer, the man whose nickel in the past has brought him his desires in the smoke line. Already some of the leading brands which formerly retailed for a nickel have been advanced to six cents, and it would now appear, from the general consensus of manufacturers' opinions that even the six-cent cigar may give way to the seven-center.

Present conditions make it absolutely impossible to continue manufacturing the so-called nickel brands at a profit. The retailers have to pay a bigger price for their goods and it will be up to the smoker to foot the bill. The tobacco market, the labor market and every other factor which enters into the manufacture of cigars at present make it imperative to put the ban on nickel smokes.

Nobody will question the assertion that it will be harder at the start, to get six or seven cents for a cigar than it was a nickel. A lone penny doesn't seem much for a man to add to the price of his favorite smoke but, as has been pointed out before, the four or three pennies in change is what seems to take the joy out of the purchase. Canadian "coppers" are even more objectionable in this respect than the small American "penny," but it is equally true that retailers are able to report a good sale for those popular brands which are now selling at six and seven cents. National advertising has created a demand for these goods and has further than that explained to the consumer the reason for the change. Public education is doing its share in combating the handicaps that a "broken-price" charge means.

Raising the price of $55 goods to $65 has been insufficient to create the proper margin for the manufacturer. Practically every manufacturer, who has not already done so, is figuring on raising his $65 goods to at least $70. This represents an increase of $15 per thousand in a very short time. No one will question the necessity of the increases and as a matter of fact the only question will be why they were not put into effect very many months before. The increases for the cheaper lines have been in the same ratio and therefore even the veriest tyro in the cigar game can realize that the nickel cigar is shortly to be a thing of the past.—Canadian Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

chase just enough for pressing needs. Half of the crop may consist of heavy quality, principally first and second capaduras, and the other half may be light.

Exports of leaf tobacco, for the week ending March 9, from the port of Havana, totaled 6,752 bales, and which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: To the United States, 6,573; to Canada, 59, and to Uruguay, 120 bales.

Garcia & Vega, of Tampa, bought 300 bales of Vuelta Abajo and Partido, through the nephew of Colonel Alvaro Garcia, Francisco Gonzalez Longo.

Leon & Delgado have still 1,000 bales of Vuelta Abajo on hand, which they are willing to part with, at prices not out of reason. They are vegas from good districts. ROSAM.

The Wellington is made of genuine French Briar, seasoned by our own special process. It breaks-in sweet and mellow. The bowl is guaranteed against cracking or burning through. The "well" catches the moisture as well as all stray crumbs of tobacco. Any tobacco tastes better in a Wellington.

W. D. C. Advertising Campaign 1917-1918

W. D. C. advertisements are now appearing in "The Saturday Evening Post," "Literary Digest," "Collier's Weekly," Railroad Men's Magazine," "Country Gentleman," "Hoard's Dairyman," "Breeder's Gazette," "Army and Navy Journal," and in many college publications.

The campaign will run for nine whole months. Generous space is being used in all mediums—all half pages and quarter pages. More than four million people will read these W. D. C. advertisements in the magazines alone.

Another big Wellington advertising campaign is now running in the Canadian newspapers.

The pipes of all nations are introduced and illustrated in the magazine advertisements—the Peace Pipe of the Indian—the Hooka of the Turk—the old Church Warden of the pioneers—the Whalebone of the Esquimaux, etc.

Watch for these W.D.C. Wellington advertisements in the magazines—cut them out and paste them in your windows.

Go over your stock and see that you have a full line of W. D. C. pipes—feature the Wellington in your counter displays—cash in on this big country-covering W. D. C. advertising campaign.

Don't let another season go by without carrying a full line of W. D. C. pipes—the Wellington in particular. Tie up with the largest pipe manufacturer in America and your pipe business will grow in a way you never thought possible.

Gladly will we send you further information on request.

"UNITED" MAY LEASE HOTEL LORRAINE.

Control of the Lorraine Hotel, at the southeast corner of Fifth avenue and Forty-fifth street, New York, may pass to another in the next few days. A lease is being arranged for the property and unless something develops unexpected by officials of the United States Mortgage and Trust Co., trustees of the Matthew Byrns estate, owners of the property, or the United Cigar Stores Co., the deal will be closed. Several others are interested in the property and have made offers for a lease of the corner, but it was said yesterday that the Cigar Stores Co. had made the best offer, which trustees would probably accept in the next few days. The lease being arranged is for twenty-one years, with a renewal for a similar period. The hotel has been held in the market at $125,000 a year net, but what are the terms on which the hotel is being leased was not to be learned from the trustees of the Byrns estate yesterday. The Lorraine Hotel is twelve stories high, with stores along the seventy-five feet of frontage on Fifth avenue. The hotel entrance is on Forty-fifth street. The property is 150 feet deep, with an "L" in the rear of the adjoining Fifth avenue property. The "L" also abuts Delmonico's building. Because of the closeness of the properties it was reported several times as having been leased by the Delmonico interests. Reports a few years ago had the buildings united and under control of Delmonico's. The sale of the Delmonico building and the report that the concern was in the market for a new place led to the story of the leasing of the Lorraine by Miss Delmonico's company for its new home. There is reason to believe the restaurant company was interested in getting control of the hotel at one time. The Lorraine is of the Fifth avenue of the days when dwellings predominated and there was nothing to indicate the coming of shops. It is one of the group of fine Fifth avenue hotels which includes the Holland House, Renaissance, Gotham, St. Regis and Savoy. It contains 150 rooms. The United Cigar Stores Co. is taking the hotel in order to get control of the stores.—New York Sun.

NEW YORK A FREE PORT.

War emergency, teaching bitter lessons by cluttered docks, delayed sailings and imports cut to relieve the pressure on our "bridge of ships," gives great impetus to the movement for free ports in America. There is a prospect that the Free Port Bills of Senator Sheppard and Representative Sanders may be merged in an Administration measure.

No other conceivable working change could so relieve war traffic troubles as could the establishment of free ports, or rather free zones within ports, at a number of points on our coasts. The plan would do well on a large scale what bonded warehouses do on a much smaller scale with vexatious labor delay and cost.

In a free zone a ship in foreign trade loads or unloads without any customs oversight whatever. If part of the cargo is re-exported it never bothers the Custom-House. Goods imported pay duty at the landward edge of the zone when finally entered. In either case the ships could sail and serve our allies and our armies unimpeded by tariff formalities.

The free zone is not a political issue. It would be equally useful with high low tariff. Neither is it experiment seeing the vast distribution industry has brought to Hongkong, Singapor Hamburg, Copenhagen and other ha bors favorably placed for the re-expo of bulk commerce.—New York Worl

POLITE, FAIR AND HELPFUL.

Courtesy, square dealing, and servi are required by the Internal Revent Bureau of its thousands of employe who are aiding in the collection of w revenues. A manual has been sent o for their use with the purpose of mal ing as pleasant as possible the task the American citizen to find out wh his Federal taxes are and how to pa them.

The internal-revenue officers are i structed to inform the taxpayer of a his rights, to require of him not 1 ce more than the law demands, while the time securing for the Governme all that justly is due it.

It is estimated that 7,000,000 America citizens will pay income taxes this yea —a great increase.

The work of estimating and collectin taxes from such a great number of ci izens is one of great magnitude, an that it should be done fairly and witho friction is an achievement worth muc effort.

BUILDING A $100,000,000 BUSINES

Nineteen-eighteen sees the tracto industry breaking into the class of thos producing goods to the value of $100 000,000 a year.

The world war and its unprecedente demands on the American farmer, wh must produce the food that is to wi the war, have been responsible for tremendous stimulation of tractor pr duction.

In 1916 35,000 tractors were manu factured.

In 1917 the number rose to 65,000.

This year, according to expert predi tion, the output will be between 100,0 and 125,000.

The average light tractor is sellin around $1,400, so that if the maximu production is reached, the volume business will total $175,000,000; and wit considerable shrinkage will run over th $100,000,000 mark.

Shortage of machinery, parts and ma terials, together with the labor strin ency that prevails in practically all i dustries, is the only thing that is puttin a brake on the tractor trade. There no question about selling the goods.

There are in the neighborhood of 1 tractor concerns in the field. These i clude a number which are still in th experimental stage, as far as their pro ucts are concerned, but more than six are making tractors and selling them a considerable scale.

Gas tractors have been on the mark for fifteen years, coming as substitut for steam traction engines operatin threshing outfits. But the great deve opment of the light tractor, suitable f individual or community use, has con within the past three years.—Class.

IN A PUP TENT.

Promoters Pushing Patriotic Pageant Plans

Arranging for a Spectacular Opening of the Liberty Bond Campaign in Tampa—T. Ed. Bryan Unopposed for Presidency of Board of Trade—The Launching of the Lithopolis—Highway Bonds Sold — Cigar Manufacturers Who Advanced Prices Are Doing Good Business—Revenue Collections for the Week Were More Than Double the Amount Collected During the Same Period Last Year

TAMPA, March 23.—The week has been an usually busy one at the factories, as is shown by the fact that internal revenue collections for the week ending today amounted to $38,788 as compared with a record of $19,324.24 for the same week last year.

T. Ed Bryan, chairman of the cigar manufacturers' bureau of the Tampa Board of Trade since the formation of that bureau, has been unanimously nominated for the presidency of the Board, no candidate against him being mentioned. Mr. Bryan's services are greatly appreciated by the manufacturers, who appreciate the fact that from now on he will be in even better position to assist the industry at crucial times.

The county commissioners, in spite of local opposition and adverse report from the capital issues committee at Washington, yesterday sold the bond issue of $875,000, authorized for the purpose of connecting Hillsborough with the highways of other counties, and will deliver the bonds and have work inaugurated after the third Liberty bond campaign. All connecting roads are expected to be paved with brick and asphalt block by the opening of the next tourist season.

Preparations are being made to open the third Liberty bond campaign with one of the greatest patriotic pageants ever seen in the south. Directors and members of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, who are staging the screen play, "The Birth of a Race," in Tampa, will take the leading parts, with hundreds of Tampans participating.

The Tampa Shipbuilding & Engineering Co. will launch the Lithopolis, first of two steel vessels being constructed by that company for the government, Monday. This will give the Oscar Daniels Company an opportunity to begin work on ten vessels of much larger tonnage.

Edgar Mayer, who represents the Regensburg factories in the cottonbelt, is in the city conferring with Mortimer and Jerome Regensburg. Jose Suarez, leaf buyer for the firm, is expected from Havana, Sunday.

Jose Lozano, resident manager of the Lozano factory, has gone to New York with his charming sister, Miss Ramona, who has spent the winter in Tampa.

Hi Hammer, sales manager for the Corral-Wodiska factory, has reached Kansas City after a successful trip further west. He has added a number of new accounts.

M. B. Pendas, after a stay of several days in Tampa, has gone to Cuba.

It is reported that a number of the manufacturers who increased prices at the beginning of the year have lost a few customers. They gained others, however, and the price increase has proven most satisfactory in every way.

FOUR CLUBMEN FOUND GUILTY.

Quite a few people were considerably surprised, Monday, when four members of the "Central Merchants' Club," on East 17th street, New York, were convicted.

The defendants were Carl Hyman, a cigar salesman, of 1018 Hoe avenue, The Bronx; his brother, Louis Hyman, said to have been steward of the club; Charles Schlenger, a restaurant keeper, of 233 East 68th street, and Jesse Mann, a salesman, of 556 West 180th street. They were charged with having maintained a room for the purposes of gambling, in violation of Section 973 of the Penal Code.

Justices Herbert, Murphy and Collins, in the Court of Special Sessions, found the prisoners guilty as charged.

AN ARKANSAS SMOKE

In "The Camel Flaggers," a story of the Ozarks, Fletcher Chenault in Collier's says: "Lige Dodson and I had foregathered on the promenade deck of the log cabin in the Ozarks to view the scenery and enjoy our pipes. At least I was enjoying mine and hoping the wind would hold to its course and protect me from the deadly fumes that emanated from the mountaineer's long-stemmed clay. For Lige had filled the bowl with dry burley, fresh from the fields and powerful as chlorine gas, which made it plain to my understanding why a mask should be part of every modern soldier's equipment. One whiff of this tobacco was enough to make the whole world swear."

The exports of walnuts from the Limoges district for the United States during 1917 were valued at $201,772, compared with $294,431 worth for 1916, according to invoices certified at the American consulate at Limoges.

Glimpses of What Cigar Dealers Are Doing in the Twin Cities

MINNEAPOLIS, March 22.—Throughout the Twin Cities, the cigar business seems to be getting better. In some places, prices continue to be slashed, but the Cigar Dealers Association is trying hard to induce a cessation of price cutting.

Americus cigars, shown in various sizes, are featured at the Hotel Dyckman stand.

Snuff is no longer found on sale in 5 cent boxes. It now comes in the 10 cent size.

Mr. Wehr, the United States Tobacco Co.'s salesman in this territory, is hard at work.

Kingdale and Integridad from the factory of Charles S. Morris & Co., are sold by many dealers here. One reason of this is that Harry Alces has many friends here.

Steve O'Brien has a large Melachrino display at his main store, 38 Sixth street.

Carl Thomas has disposed of his Boston Block cigar store on Hennepin avenue.

Gladstone "world famous $1 pipes" are displayed at the cigar department of the Powers Mercantile Co.

W. O. Goodman has a large new Harvester sign over his store in the corner of the Nicollet hotel.

Pollack's Perfect stogies made by Pollack Stogie Co. of Pittsburgh are well distributed here.

El Grado, a 10 for 25 cent cigar made by Kraus Co., is seen on a number of cigar counters.

Soudan, a 5 cent cigarette made by the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., has been placed with the trade here.

Flor de Mendel has many friends. They are distributed by Winecke & Doerr.

Tom Moore, in the regal shape, sells at 2 for 25 cents. They are wrapped in foil.

"Smokes for Soldiers" bags, put in all the stores by the Minneapolis Daily News and the Minneapolis Cigar Dealers Ass'n., are collecting a lot of smokes for the Sammies. The bags are emptied once a week.

W. S. Conrad Co. will shortly place with the trade Henry the Fourth shade wrapped cigars.

Muriel midget size that formerly sold for 35 cents the box has gone to 50 cents.

N. R. Price owns the cigar department in the Powers Mercantile Co.'s store. His lines are many and he features American Cabinet from R. Steinecke, Flor de L. Sanchez from L. Sanchez, Tampa, and Luciana and Club Quality from Harris-Schwarz Co. Price carries a full line of all well known brands. At present he is selling Epicure cigarettes, the 15 cent package for 10 cents.

Mozart mild havanas are coming strong. No stock is complete without this well known seller.

Winston Harper & Fisher are the distributors of the Harvester brand. Sales on this brand are very big at present.

Wherever pipes are sold you are bound to find a full line of W. D. C. pipes and holders from Wm. De Muth & Co., New York.

Antonella 7 centers or 3 for 20 are packed in foil packages. Lubensky Bros & Kleiner of Grand Rapids, Michigan, make this brand and several accounts handle the brand locally.

Carl Thomas features El Stefano from Celestino Vega & Co. Norma, from R. Steinecke & Co., Henry the Fourth and Alexander Humboldt from Preferred Havana Tobacco Co. and a full line of all the local sellers. Duc de Tampa, at 5 cents, is Carls' latest offering. It is taking well.

Geo. R. Newell & Co. use as leaders Chancellor and Kelly Bouquet from the Havana American Co.

The Enterprise Cigar Co. of Trenton has Lord Sterling 10 cent brand planted with the trade.

Camels are the leading cigarette of the town. It seems simply impossible for the jobbers to get enough Camels to supply the demand.

Falk's tobaccos are sold by everybody. Serene and Herbert Tareyton are big sellers.

Sight Draft cigars are now 6 cents. The W. K. Gresh Co. has a large sale on this brand which is placed with W. S. Conrad Co.

The F. Garcia & Bro., Tampa made, is sold where good cigars are featured. The Minneapolis Drug Co. keep the trade supplied with this popular brand.

Lines controlled by the Nathanson Cigar Co. are the Castellano, Flor de Melba, John Ruskin, New Bachelor and Broadwall brands. Ike Nathanson is the head of this progressive house. They do an enormous cigarette and tobacco business.

The new El Firma has been placed with the trade. El Firma is made in St. Paul by Hart & Murphy. Mr. Smith covers the local trade.

Over at the West Hotel, Lester Carson conducts one of the finest cigar stands to be found in the northwest. He features Casa Vista, Kingdale and La Integridad from Chas. S. Morris & Co. Tuval from Marcelino Perez & Co. and El Planco and Apropo from Ruy Suarez & Co. All the popular brands are for sale and a big line of imported goods is also carried.

Each time Wm. Rosenfeld comes to town he open new accounts on Charles the Great clear havanas. At present some of the very best dealers in the city carry this popular seller.

El Roi Tan and Lucius cigars have a big sale. Stone-Ordean Wells Co. handle large quantities of these sterling sellers. Their Minneapolis branch reports a big increase in sale.

Gato is being placed by W. S. Conrad Co. Repeat orders are many for the short time the brand has been handled by the house of Conrad.

Bodad and El Radio made by Gans Bros. are in lots of cases. Sales are good on these brands.

Harvey Vreeland is building up a nice business on Benson & Hedges cigarettes. The club and hotel trade is especially big on B. and H. cigarettes.

Duke of Manchester 5 cent cigars go good. The Manchester Cigar Mfg. Co. is the maker of this popular short smoke.

Ira Farr is still in the game. He sells Garcia & Vega cigars and is doing well. He has many fine accounts who carry several sizes of this popular seller.

Americus mild havanas have made a big hit. McFarland & Patton, the sales getters for Francesco Torre & Cia, are in very strong with the Minneapolis trade. H. L. H.

For the information and assistance of taxpayers, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has had printed thousands of copies of an excess profits tax primer for distribution by collectors of internal revenue. The primer contains fifty-one typical questions and answers covering every phase of the excess profits law. A careful reading of the pamphlet will render considerably less difficult the filing of an excess profits return.

A big step toward the upbuilding of Enfield, N. C., has been taken by the Enfield Tobacco Co., a concern backed by prominent citizens of the vicinity, in the letting of contracts for the construction of two tobacco warehouses and four prize houses. Work on the new buildings has already begun and they will be completed by August 1, when the Enfield tobacco market will be reopened after having been closed for fifteen years.—Durham Sun.

A lumber production in the United States of 39,200,000,000 feet in 1917, or a decrease of 2 per cent as compared with the cut of 1916, is the estimate made by the Forest Service based on incomplete reports received up to February 26. About one-half of the 34,000 mills listed by the Forest Service and the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association had at that time made reports. Because of the need for an accurate census caused by the country's wartime demands for lumber, officials in charge of the work are urging delinquent mills to report as soon as possible.

A great surprise was sprung on the people of Leamington, Ont., last month, when the news was circulated that Col. W. T. Gregory, Canada's leading tobacco grower, was quietly married to Miss Constance Huffman. The wedding took place in the presence of the bride's immediate relatives, at the bedside of Mr. Gregory, who had been seriously ill.

America will speak its heart in response to the German offensive in France by the eagerness with which its people subscribe to the third Liberty Loan bonds soon to be offered. In analyzing Secretary McAdoo's plan for the forthcoming financial campaign, Benjamin Strong, chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee, Tuesday night indicated that the announcement of the new loan came at a psychological moment in this nation's history.

There were 706 hogsheads of tobacco put on the Louisville breaks Wednesday, a week ago, and all leaf met with good demand. The best sale of the day was at the Tenth street house, where seven hogsheads, shipped by L. P. Alexander, of Owen County, sold for prices ranging from $29 to $45.50, a general average of $36.92. At the same house, Compton & Goodie, of Hart County, sold five hogsheads of Burley at prices ranging from $34.50 to $41, average of $37.

The American Cigar Co. is planning a cigar factory in Madisonville, Ky. According to report, a representative of the company stated the only thing that the business men of Madisonville were expected to do was to assist the company getting labor. He said that it would require 300 girls and women to operate the factory. "The conditions are favorable to the company and the chances for Madisonville to get the establishment are very good. The factory site has already been selected."

The New York Catholic war fund, a day after the campaign had passed its time limit, added nearly $1,000,000 to the fund to support the work of the Knights of Columbus in the American army camps abroad. The total Tuesday night was $4,069,542, a gain of $941,053 over the day before. Final reports will be received today, probably. The most optimistic among the leaders hope that the figures will be boosted to $5,000,000, double the sum that was set as the original object of the drive.

Sterling J. Alexander, a capitalist of Meade County, Kentucky, is at the head of a company being organized to establish a wholesale grocery in New Albany, Ind. It is said that articles of incorporation will be filed in the office of the Secretary of State at Indianapolis within a few days, and that the capital stock of the concern will be $350,000. The company is negotiating in New Albany for the purchase of a site for a warehouse east of Vincennes street, between the Pennsylvania and the Southern railroads.

In Eau Claire, Wis., Kelley's Smoke Shop and Fleming Bros. jewelry store are to trade locations, April 1. The jewelry store will be moved to the building owned by Mrs. John Barland, 215 South Barstow street. The Dairy Lunch, which occupied half of the building, was closed. The partition dividing the building will be removed, and Fleming Bros. will occupy the entire ground floor space. The Smoke Shop will move to the stand vacated by Fleming Bros., 213 South Barstow street. The building is owned by William Kelley.

In the office of Edward N. Breitung, wealthy German shipping broker of 11 Pine street, New York, agents of the Department of Justice arrested on Tuesday, a forty-two-year-old Teuton named Alfred Pick for alleged complicity in plots to destroy ships by attaching bombs to the rudders. Pick is said to have been a roommate of Max Breitung, cousin of the rich broker, who was accused with the notorious Lieut. Robert Fay and other plotters, and who is now in the internment camp at Fort Oglethorpe. He was also friendly with Herbert Kienzle, indicted with Fay and also interned.

A branch of the American Cigar Co. will be opened at Hopkinsville, Ky., in the near future if plans under consideration materialize satisfactorily. District Manager D. Weiss, of Cleveland, was in Paducah, Saturday, conferring with members of the Board of Trade as to the best factory site possibilities in West Kentucky, and left Sunday for Hopkinsville. The American Cigar now has factories at Paducah and at Owensboro. It is considering the erection of plants at Cairo, Ill., and at Hopkinsville. It is planned to erect three-story brick building at Hopkinsville, 150 x 200 feet, and to employ from 300 to 400 girls and women.

A total of 115,460 pounds of tobacco was sold on the floors of the four Madison, Ind., warehouses Wednesday a week ago, with floor averages ranging from $22.85 to $30.03. The market took a sudden jump and all grades were much higher than the day previous. Record-breaking crop averages were made by many sellers, average running from $27.50 to $44 a hundred pounds. The appearance of the tobacco offered would hardly bring but a medium average any other time this season, but the weed seemed to be in great demand, and the sales were marked by continual rapid fire bidding by all buyers. Several baskets sold as high as $55 a hundred.

Saloon keepers had a bad day in court at Tampa Saturday, when Judge W. S. Graham fined Charlie Ewing and Manuel Veloso $1,000 each, with the alternative of 60 days in the county jail, and revoked their licenses for violation of the Davis package law. John Bell drew a fine of $300 or 60 days; Genie Gilbert was fined $100, while Segundo Garcia was permitted to pay the costs and go free. The supersedas bond for Ewing and Veloso was placed at $2,000, and the defendants have 60 days in which to file a bill of exception. It is said both cases will be appealed to the Florida Supreme Court and a test case made of the constitutionality of the Davis package law in regard to a license being revoked.

The Pamies & Arango cigar factory at St. Augustine, Fla., will double its capacity soon. This extension is made possible by the addition of another member of the firm in the person of Robert S. Scott, a wealthy resident of Pittsburgh, who has bought out the interest of Augustine Sollar. Mr. Scott will furnish ample capital with which to increase the output of the factory which is not now able to keep up its numerous orders. The factory building is big enough to accommodate the increased force.

Near "No Man's Land"

Together with a card of thanks for SUN Fund tobacco comes a poem from Private B. A. Schak Company G, 16th United States Infantry, in France. The verses tell of the death and burial of the soldier's rookie pal—he calls him "Buddy"—as follows:

There wa'n't no bugler there a-blowin' taps;
The regimental chaplain, though, was 'round;
An' I'm a tellin' you as how I'm feelin' blue,
'Cause they put my rookie Buddy in the ground.

I showed 'im how to do "right shoulder arms"
An' told him all a doughboy oughta know;
We slept together, but today he sleeps
Near "No Man's Land," beneath the mud an' snow.

He said 'is ma an' sister back at home
Kissed 'im a dozen times in fond goodbys,
An' when 'e talked about 'em I could see
That look o' longin' shinin' in his eyes.

I hate to think o' how 'is mother feels—
A mother's loneliness is worse 'n mine.
I'd write 'is folks a letter, only that
This writin' business ain't much in my line.

I don't know what to do when I'm off post.
My Buddy's gone; an' seems like all I know
I'd like to put a flower on 'is grave
Near "No Man's Land," beneath the mud and snow.

Said the New York Tribune on March 21: "Continued weakness in the shares of the American Sumatra Tobacco Co. yesterday attracted attention to a report that a heavy short interest in the stock had recently made a private settlement with important stockholding interests. The report also suggested that the alleged pool which was said to have been largely instrumental in running the price up above 95 was now trying to realize on its holdings. The stock closed yesterday at 90¾, off 1¼ points."

The Charles F. Noyes Company sold for about $185,000 cash for E. N. Chapman, E. de C. Chisholm and Edgar D. Pouch to Joseph F. Cullman, representing Cullman Brothers, H. Duys & Co., Inc., and E. Rosenwald & Brother, the eight-story warehouse Nos. 84 and 86 South street, New York, covering a plot of 7,700 square feet, between Old Slip and Wall street. It is understood that the purchasers will organize a company to take title to the property and hold it to control storage space for tobacco, although other storage will be permitted in the building. It is leased to C. C. Hamilton & Co. until October 1, 1918. Goldsmith, Cohen, Cole & Weiss and Norman Johnson were the attorneys in the sale.

OPPOSING THE GREENHUT SALE.

On the ground that Joseph B. Greenhut arranged for the sale of the stock of the Greenhut Company, Inc., of New York, to Gimbel Bros., in violation of the bulk sales law and without the ratification or approval of the board of directors, the Holland Security Co., owner of 45,000 shares of the first and second preferred stock of the corporation, has asked for the appointment of a receiver for the department store property. The argument will come up before Supreme Court Justice Erlanger on Friday.

With a view of enlarging the Imperial Tobacco plant at Oxford, N. C., Col. W. B. Ballou has acquired for the company the old Rowan Kingsburg home place across the street in rear of the plant and extending for some distance along the tracks of the Southern Railway. The home of Lonnie Hicks and other buildings on the property will be moved to make room for the enlargement of the plant. The two immense structures will be connected by an overhead tube. The Imperial plant is now handling a large portion of the Kentucky crop, and with the enlargement the plant will need several hundred more hands to work throughout the year.—Oxford Ledger.

Fire, thought to have been caused by hot ashes dropping from the furnace in the basement of the Huber & Bunker jewelry store at 1108 Tower avenue, Duluth, Minn., at an early hour Saturday morning, resulted in a property loss of between $15,000 and $20,000. Adjoining stores of the Holt Cigar Co. and of the Graham Candy Co., which were separated from the jewelry store by wooden walls which the five ate through, were damaged, but most of the loss was caused by smoke and water.

WHAT WHEAT CONTROL CAN DO.

It is estimated by E. N. Fairchild, a Cleveland, Ohio, miller of long experience and sound judgment, that nearly $900,000,000 have been saved the American people on flour since last July by the United States Food Administration. Mr. Fairchild said recently in an interview reported in the American Grocer: "It is an easy thing for a person to criticise an official of the Government, and criticising seems to be one of the traits of Americans. It is not difficult for us to recall that a year ago, when America had not entered the war against Germany and there was no Food Administrator or regulation of the markets, flour was retailing at $20 a barrel. This year, with a smaller crop to work on and the country in the midst of the war, flour is averaging about $12 a barrel. It has been estimated that the annual consumption of flour in this country is one barrel per person in normal times. There are about 110,000,000 people in the United States, and the saving effected by the United States Food Administration has been about 20 per cent. Now, if it has managed to save the country $1 on each barrel consumed since it was founded, it is readily seen that it has saved the people $88,000,000. By the same method of figuring, if $10 has been saved on each barrel, the Food Administration has saved us $880,000,000 since July. I am not content to believe, however, that it has saved us a dollar less than $20 a barrel, or $1,760,000,000."

WAR EXPORTS OF FOOD.

The total exports of wheat and wheat flour from the United States to Great Britain, France and Italy since the war began was equivalent to 384,000,000 bushels, or an average of 110,000,000 bushels per year. Exports of pork and pork products totaled almost 2,000,000,000 pounds, while sugar exports to those countries showed a yearly average of 648,000,000 pounds. Oats exports for the three and one-half years totaled 212,751,000 bushels, corn 24,310,000 bushels and rye 3,618,000 bushels.

Exports of fresh beef amounted to 443,484,000 pounds in the three and one-half years, while exports of butter totaled 29,000,000 pounds, cheese 103,500,000 pounds, and condensed milk 126,000,000 pounds. Cottonseed, linseed and other oil products and by-products to be used for feeding cattle totaled 611,000,000 pounds.

ONLY A HORSE.

Issued by "The New York Women's League for Animals."

Only a horse that lies dead in the street,
Prone on the pave, 'mid the hurrying feet;
Only a horse! that, through sunshine and rain,
Toiled for his master, and did not complain!

Cart him away! he has pulled his last load
Over the hills, through the long winding road;
Weary and bruised, sore and crippled and sprained,—
Worked to his death, but he never complained.

Rough is his coat, with each rib showing through;
Scant though his food, he was faithful and true!
Beaten, abused, bearing burdens of pain—
Only a horse and he could not complain!

Cart him away, his labors are o'er;
Heavy for him were the burdens he bore.
Cover him up, for his end is attained,—
Dying in harness, he never complained!

Who shall dare say,—such as these have no soul,—
Nothing before them, no far away goal;
No meed for toil, and no balm for their pain,
Though they are silent, and never complain!

There must be surcease, and freedom from care,
"Rest for the weary," forever somewhere;
Some glad unwinding of earth's tangled skein;
Where Justice triumphs, and none need complain!

THREATENED STRIKE IN KANSAS CITY.

At a time when it is the duty of all Americans to pull together for the national good, to speed up production of all kinds and to maintain an even front of cordial support in all details of civil and economic life, all the labor unions of Kansas City, Mo., including transportation employees, propose to go out on a "sympathetic strike" with some laundry workers. Some 30,000 persons, including union workers of all sorts, including waiters and some other domestic workers, "are expected to go on strike."

No wonder a union labor leader of the capacity of Mr. Gompers finds his hair turning white or disappearing altogether. But not all this blocking of the day's work springs from ignorance; there is poisonous influence of German or Socialistic origin at work, and at this time to hamper the progress of work is a form of sedition which deserves small patience and short consideration before smart punishment.

The plain duty of labor in this war should no longer be clouded and befouled by sedition and treachery. The heart of labor is as sound as that of the soldier in the field, but the guile of the German influence is too little understood by the workers.—Evening Sun.

Work Made Easier

Mr. Edison it was, I believe, who said, "Genius is 10 per cent inspiration and 90 per cent perspiration." In short, this is trustworthy recognition of the great value of work.

The benefits to be enjoyed through work have been recognized from the time of the ancient Hebrew prophets. We find in biblical history the following: "The hand of the diligent shall bear rule: but the slothful shall be under tribute."

How Not to Work.

It is an all too common practice to look upon work as irksome; that it is a task which must be performed perforce. An investigation of the achievements of notable men would doubtless disclose the fact that they actually loved their work—that to strive for praiseworthy accomplishment was real fun for them rather than a hardship.

Another common and hurtful practice is that of postponing action, and worrying over the work in hand until it becomes a veritable bugaboo. Some men spend more mental energy—yes, waste it—in the contemplation of what they must do than in the actual doing.

There is an old homely adage which goes: "The way to do a thing is to do it." Instead of throwing off their coats, figuratively at least, and buckling down to work, some men are wont to rush about in a more or less excited manner, waste time and tire themselves out only to find at the end of the day that they have made no progress.

How to Work.

My observation of successful workers leads me to believe that the following five rules, if adhered to both rigidly and cheerfully, will make for progress and prosperity:

First—Have confidence in your own ability but without egotism. Second—Enjoy your work as if it were some pleasurable sport. Third—Do not magnify the task set for you—rather minimize it. Fourth—Begin with the determination to do one thing thoroughly. This will enable you to do many thing thoroughly. Fifth—Concentrate on your work—and work.

Of these five rules concentration comes first in importance. Through dismissing other considerations from the mind and concentrating on the work in hand a man can accomplish more with less effort than in any other manner. The ability to concentrate can be acquired with a little practice, and will soon become a most helpful habit.

—George A. Gaston, in the G. W. W. Bulletin.

"THE PUSHCART PEDDLER AT VERDUN."

Suppose some writer of highly colored fiction were to get past our editorial censors with a rattling good story under the above title. Suppose it was all about a shy, dark-haired boy whose immigrant parents left their native Greece to struggle for a liivng in our country and raised their son on the old legends of Agamemnon and Hector, so that he grew up with a warrior's heart. The author might go on to tell how the boy left school to help support his family and, being too modest and timid to assert himself, took any humble sort of job, so that the Great War found him selling fruit on the street corner. His heart went out to the holy cause of France and he enlisted in the Foreign Legion. The writer might then put him unscathed through three years of peril and bravery, culminating in the epic of Verdun, and end the narration by having him decorated with the Cross of War and the Military Medal, etc., etc., and kissed on both cheeks by an admiring French general.

You'd say that was a little too steep.

And yet—this is the phraseology of the French Republic:

"Kornies (Nick), Legionnaire, Eleventh Company de Marche, Foreign Legion—elite grenadier; 20th August, 1917, won the admiration of all his comrades by his courage and contempt for danger. Led his comrades to the conquest of a trench which was defended with energy and which was captured along a distance of 1,500 yards after several hours of bloody combat; took, single-handed, numerous prisoners; already twice cited in Army Orders."

That same Nick Kornies used to sell bananas at Twenty-third street and Avenue B, New York City.—Collier's Weekly.

CUBA IN THE WAR

Intensely Loyal to the Allies

HAVANA, Cuba, April 2.—On the eve of the fist anniversay of Cuba's declaration of war ainst Germany, the capital of "the Pearl o the Antilles" will present a festive apıarance and, as Sunday is a day of celebratin in all Latin-American countries, extense preparations have been made for a demostration of loyalty to the Allies on April 7.

It is difficult for one unacquainted with nditions in Latin-America to realize just wat one year of participation in the war hs meant to Cuba. When, on April 7 last, Iesident Menocal affixed his signature to the bl, unanimously voted by both branches of te Cuban Congress, declaring a state of war t exist between Cuba and the Imperial Gerın Government, he realized that he was trowing into the balance much of this Al's economic future; but, as he stated in his essage to the Congress, Cuba's loyalty to te United States admitted of no other procdure. The action taken by Cuba was wide acclaimed throughout the United States d interpreted rightly as especially signifint to Americans, in that it fully justified tat policy of all Presidents since Monroe, mely, the right of small nations to essay work out for themselves the development their own destinies.

The case of Cuba is an exceptional one, its ry uniqueness serving but to emphasize the oral as well as the material value of the try of the United States in the war. Before is happened, there were many persons in e western hemisphere who questioned the al motives underlying the repeated asserons of the Allies that their cause was that democracy and that it signified the triumph the principle of nationality. Since Cuba's ar declaration, many activities, some miliry and naval, others economic, have been lt in motion here to aid the United States. rom the time when the German and Ausian steamships seized in Cuban waters were rned over outright as a gift to the United ates Shipping Board, until the present, hen Cuba is mobilizing her military resources to send a force of from 10,000 to 20,000 en to France, the whole policy of the reıblic has been to subordinate other matters those obligations of alliance which her eclaration of war entailed.

The Cuban Army and Navy have been reganized, and experts from the United States my staff have estimated that Cuba's miliry force could be enlarged to a maximum 100,000 men and maintained at that figure definitely. The Cuban Navy has assumed trol duty not only in Cuban territorial waters, but also far out in the Caribbean, and it has been augmented by a fleet of submarine chasers, while other craft are under construction. In addition to these military and naval measures, many young Cubans are now in the French battle lines as infantrymen and aviators, and it is significant to note that as instructors for the Cuban Escadrille, which is intending to sail shortly for the French front, the Allies detailed two of their leading airmen to Havana, and that both these flyers were native Cubans.

GENERAL MARIO G. MENOCAL, PRESIDENT OF CUBA.

Economically, Cuba's service, while no more sincere, has been much more conspicuous. When United States Minister Gonzales informed the Cuban people in a proclamation that a bountiful crop of sugar which was required to feed the Allies would be expected from them, he little realized the remarkable answer which this country was destined to make. Cuba's crop of sugar this year totals 3,600,000 long tons, which is the greatest sugar crop ever raised by any one country in the world's history. The entire crop has been turned over to agencies of the United States Food Administration, and is being marketed at a figure which, while it brings a diminished profit to its patriotic producers, at the same time has safeguarded the world from profiteering and extortion in this essential food commodity. But there has not been a concentration in sugar production at the expense of her Allies, for Cuba is developing her agricultural resources in other lines to a great degree; so it is hoped that the necessity for insisting this year on the usual importations of foodstuffs from the United States will be diminished in the months to come.

One who would include in the war cooperation of Cuba only aid of a military and economic value, is unfamiliar with the nature of the Cuban people. It is a tribute not alone to the nation and to the Cubans, but to the patriotic wife of Cuba's President, Madame Mariana Seva de Menocal, that the Cuban Red Cross, which she actively heads, has raised $1,000,000 for its work, and is now equipping a hospital unit manned exclusively by Cuban physicians and nurses for service in France.

While Cuba has realized that her first service to her Allies should be an economic one, and this service has been patriotically and unstintingly rendered, there are grounds for hope that the next twelve months will show an emprise of alliance which many larger and richer Latin-American nations would do well to emulate. When the population of Cuba is taken into consideration—it is considerably short of 3,000,000—one is struck by the tremendous activity that must be displayed by the people of the island, whose foreign commerce during the year just past totalled more than $650,000,000.

Close observers who are today reviewing Cuba's achievements in her first year as an Ally, point out these significant facts:

Under the guidance of President Menocal, Cuba has now assumed an enduring first place in all present and future steps for Latin-American solidarity.

Cuba has solved, as all nations before her have done, through an efficiency incident to carrying on warfare, her own lesser internal problems.

Cuba has carried into the western world as an abiding proof of democracy, the doctrine so eloquently asserted by the Allies in the case of Belgium, that smaller countries, just as greater ones, have their rights to, and shall be protected in, their nationalism.

The keynote of the speeches and celebration tomorrow in Havana, and throughout the republic, will embody these ideals, and when the short history of this small but loyal ally of the United States is reviewed, there is justification for the attitude so aptly expressed in the words, "Bravo Cuba Iibre!"

The Cuban Escadrille

Lieut. Santiago Campuzano, the young Cuban aviator who enlisted in the French Aviation Corps at the beginning of the war, is now in New York. He is waiting for Lieut. Francisco Terry, another young Cuban aviator, who will shortly arrive in New York from France. These two young Cubans were sent by the French Government on a special mission to instruct the Cuban Escadrille, which is intending to sail shortly for France.

The Cuban Escadrille was organized by Col. Manuel Coronado, a member of the Cuban Senate and editor of the newspaper La Discusion. Col. Coronado originally planned for a body of twenty-five trained Cuban aviators to comprise the escadrille, but already over 100 young Cubans have enlisted in this unit. These youths represent the best families of Cuba, and have volunteered to take the prescribed course in aviation and individually to bear the expense of their airplanes and equipment.

A SAMPLE OF THE CUBAN ARMY, MARCHING UP THE PRADO, HAVANA

When the Allies decided to send two of their leading airmen to Cuba, they detailed Lieuts. Campuzano and Terry, who are both native Cubans. Both Campuzano and Terry enlisted at the beginning of the war, and have each participated in about twenty air battles. Lieut. Campuzano, who is twenty-five years old, has already sent two German machines crashing to the ground. He has served in the Belgian campaign and has received war crosses from both France and Belgium. Lieut. Terry, who a short time ago celebrated his twenty-eighth birthday, has served in the Roumanian campaign, and has received the French Croix de Guerre. Lieut. Terry has downed three hostile machines. Both young Cubans will sail for Havana in a few weeks.

The formation of the Cuban Escadrille is one of the many steps taken by the Cuban Government to cooperate actively with the Allies in this gigantic struggle for democracy.

Committee Representing the Trade Will Do Everything in Its Power to Expedite and Increase Sales of Liberty Bonds—A Preliminary Meeting—Wise Presides—Speeches by Sweezy and Bell—Dushkind Delegated to Work Out Details—Utilizing the Organization of the T. M. A.

Members of the Liberty Loan Committee for the Tobacco Trade held their first get-together meeting at the office of the Tobacco Merchants' Association, 5 Beekman street, New York, Tuesday afternoon. Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Co., who was delegated by the Federal Reserve Board to head the committee charged with the responsibility of accounting for the Tobacco Trade in the sale of THIRD LIBERTY LOAN BONDS acting as chairman, and Counselor Charles Dushkind of the T. M. A. as secretary.

E. B. Sweezy, vice-president of the First National Bank, made an address on behalf of the General Liberty Loan Committee, explaining the particulars of the new issue and calling special attention to the fact that volume in subscribers was just as vitally important as volume in amount of subscriptions. He offered several valuable suggestions based upon the experience gained in floating the past two loans, which were eagerly seized upon by the committee.

He was followed by W. E. Bell, who enlarged upon Mr. Sweezy's remarks and pointed out the necessity of going into this campaign with all the push and energy possible so that the desired result might be achieved with all possible speed.

A general discussion then took place, and various plans were advanced for an intensive drive to reach every branch of the industry. Mr. Dushkind was finally delegated to work out the details of the campaign. He thereupon announced that the entire staff and the office of the T. M. A. will be devoted almost exclusively from now on to the promotion of the THIRD LIBERTY LOAN CAMPAIGN, full details of which will be announced later.

From beginning to end the meeting was an enthusiastic one, and it was apparent that the committee, can be depended upon to retain for the tobacco industry the position it has attained for itself by its achievements in the last loan. The members of the committee are as follows:

Edward Wise, chairman; Fred. Hirschhorn, vice-chairman; George H. Hummel, vice-chairman; Julius Lichtenstein, vice-chairman; Lewis Gompers, vice-chairman; Charles Dushkind, secretary; John Bain, Jr., publisher, Tobacco Leaf; John Conley, Jr., The Conley Foil Co.; Joseph F. Cullman, Jr., of Cullman Bros.; E. H. Davis, business manager, U. S. Tobacco Journal; Charles Dushkind, secretary and counsel, Tobacco Merchants' Association of the United States; Arthur M. Eisig, first vice-president, Metropolitan Tobacco Co.; G. W. Faber, president, G. W. Faber, Inc.; Vincent J. Farley, publisher, The Retail Tobacconist; Lewis Gompers, president, Ind. Ret. Tobacconists Assoc. of America; Alexander Herbert, vice-president, Philip Morris & Co., Ltd.; Albert H. Hillman, publisher, Tobacco Record; Fred. Hirschhorn, president, General Cigar Co.; William Hollingsworth, chairman, Retailers' Council T.M.A.; J. L. Hoffman, vice-president, Falk Tobacco Co.; George H. Hummel, vice-president, P. Lorillard Co.; D. Emil Klein, president, E. M. Schwarz & Co.; Julius Klorfein; Asa Lemlein, manager, E. H. Gato Cigar Co.; Julius Lichtenstein, president, American Sumatra Tobacco Co.; L. A. Lincoln, Lincoln Bros.; Joseph Allendorf, president, Tobacco Salesmen's Association; Walter H. O'Brien, vice-president, The American Tobacco Co.; Y. Pendas, Y. Pendas & Alvarez; Jonathan Peterson, president, Weyman-Bruton Co.; I. C. Rosenthal, of Rosenthal Bros., Inc.; Benno Rosenwald, E. Rosenwald & Bros.; Alfred S. Rossin, of S. Rossin & Sons; D. A. Schulte, president, D. A. Schulte, Inc.; C. R. Sherlock, vice-president, United Cigar Stores Co.; Otis Smith, president, Geo. W. Helme Co.; Arthur Stern, treasurer, Metropolitan Tobacco Co.; George L. Storm, president, Tobacco Products Corp.; A. L. Sylvester, president, American Cigar Co.; J. Tauss, president, Bronx Ret. Cig. Dealers Assn.; Luis Toro, president, Porto Rican Amer. Tob. Co.; Samuel Turner of Turco-American Tobacco Co., Inc.; Theodore Werner, president, T. J. Dunn & Co.; Edward Wise, president, United Cigar Stores Co.

WILLIAM H. WHITE

The manager of the Stock Exchange cigar store, on the southwest corner of La Salle and Washington streets, Chicago, is a man who "gets there" when it comes to securing trade or making friends.

As an employe of the "United," he entered the cigar business in Rochester, N. Y., some nine years ago.

Though Horace Greeley's advice: "Go West, young man, go West," was addressed to a previous generation, White was persuaded to travel Westward to improve his fortune. From Rochester he proceeded to Chicago.

White is only 28 years old, but he has amply proven his worth. In the position he occupies at present, he is envied. Not because he is colossally rich but because he "gets along so nicely." Today, in the cigar trade, "big money" is not made quickly. Yet, in making a list of store managers who bid fair to have a most prosperous future, a wise man who knows Chicago assuredly would write the name of William H. White.

RED, WHITE AND BLUE TONIC

(Prepared by George Ade.)

Is there, in the most outlying township of the United States, a man, woman, or child who does not know why we are at war and why we must win the war if we hope to continue in business as a free country?

Is there any human person in this nation so numb above the collar as not to understand that our government must strike quick and effective blows to end the war soon, so that the lives of our boys may be spared and all the more civilized nations of the world saved from exhaustion and bankruptcy.

We need to remind ourselves constantly of the causes leading up to the war. We are not to forget German brutalities or the magnificent martyrdom of France or the insults we endured before we became fighting mad.

But the man or woman who needs to be convinced in 1918 that our cause is just and our motives clear is not worth bothering over.

We are too busy these days to stop and try to pump blood into shellfish.

Our present occupation is to sort out the quick from the dead.

Every resident of the U. S. A. is to be tagged, either as an asset or a liability.

Who is that sitting so quietly back in the dim corner, hoping to be overlooked?

It is the citizen who can afford to buy a bond, but is modestly endeavoring to conceal the fact.

Jar loose, Mr. Barnacle!

You can afford almost anything you want. If you don't want the Liberty loan bonds, you had better take a few doses of the Red, White and Blue tonic and get rid of the tired feeling.

BULL DURHAM OUTPUT

Placed at the Disposal of the Government—Smoking Tobacco Required for Our Fighters.

The Government has taken over the entire output of "Bull Durham" tobacco, manufactured by the American Tobacco Co. From now on the entire output of the Durham, N. C., factories will be at the disposal of the Government. So far as needed the output of the factories will be devoted to supplying the army canteens.

Demand among United States troops in camps here and abroad for Bull Durham has been showing steady increase until finally the position was reached where the company found itself unable to take care of the Government needs and domestic requirements as well.

The company will receive the same price for its goods from the Government as it charged domestic jobbers.

For just how long a period the company will be thus restricted in selling this brand it is impossible to say at present.

ARE WE WORTH DYING FOR?

A Sermon for Stay-at-Homes

By Rev. John Haynes Holmes.

We stay-at-homes are the responsible members of the community. We are the men who determine policies, enact legislation, and issue orders. We are the ones who have commanded these young men to go forth and die. We have exacted of them the perfect sacrifice. And whatever this sacrifice may mean from the political or social standpoint, we must not forget that from the personal standpoint, it is nothing more nor less than a sacrifice for ourselves!

We have asked these young men to die for us and for our children. We are not going to do the dying ourselves, we who have enjoyed so much at so small a price of effort; but we are passing on this duty to others, who have enjoyed so little as yet, and therefore must make the supreme sacrifice of a vicarious atonement.

And no man who is a man, it seems to me, can see another march away in his place and on his behalf to meet privations, sufferings, dangers and perhaps a dreadful death, without finding himself face to face, by day and by night, with the fateful question, Am I worth dying for? What have I ever done to demand a sacrifice like this? Who am I that I should ask another to pay for me "the last full measure of devotion"?

Any man or woman, in the face of what is going on in the world and in our own country, who can live to-day as he lived yesterday, without sacrifice or denial such as he never knew before, is a being hopelessly lost to all spiritual understanding.

The problem of our worthiness does not end with the end of the Great War. So long as we shall live, and our children and our children's children after us, there will stand the myriad graves from Switzerland to the English channel. And as long as these shall last, so long must last the duty of our perfect sacrifice. To our last day on earth, it will be asked of us, Were you worth dying for? Therefore every day hereafter must be to us a day of consecration! Said Mr. Britling, writing in the early dawn of his dead son—"Let us make ourselves watchers and guardians of the order of the world. . . . If only for love of our dead. . . . Let us pledge ourselves to service."

We are not worth dying for, as we stand to-day—either ourselves, or the world that we have made. Had we been worth dying for, there were no need to die. But death has come to others; and to us, the stay-at-homes, must come the stern resolve that it shall be not in vain.—Forbes Magazine.

THOSE WHO FOMENT DISCONTENT

Do they want uninterrupted work at fair pay? Or, is the so-called Cigar Makers Council, otherwise yclept "the Bolsheviki," endeavoring to drive cigar manufacturers away from New York City?

If those who foment discontent are allowed to continue making trouble, what will the end be?

If the harrassment of employers here goes on, it is sure that some of the factories will be moved to localities where cigar makers are more amenable to reason.

Pernicious agitation, halting industry and making outputs uncertain, has caused a situation that can not be long endured by New York cigar manufacturers. Goaded by demands impossible to grant, some manufacturers have reached the point where they would retire from business rather than yield more to "the Bolsheviki."

How unreasonable and unfair "the Bolsheviki" can be, how lop-sided their pretensions are, what unintelligence characterizes their plans, has been proclaimed by the international president of the Cigar Makers Union.

In effect, dominance by "the Bolsheviki" would be the ruin of the cigar industry in New York.

Organized labor, or at least the unionized toilers who are honest and patriotic, agreed to discontinue labor disputes during the war.

But "the Bolsheviki," constantly creating friction, apparently is utilizing each opportunity to multiply strife.

THE THIRD LIBERTY LOAN

"I am sure that the people will respond to the Third Liberty Loan with the same loyalty and enthusiasm that characterized their support of the first two loans.

"The great events now happening in France must fire the soul of every American with a new determination to furnish all the dollars and all the material resources of America that are needed to put an end to the execrable atrocities of German militarism.

"Defeat faces the Kaiser. Let us hasten it by asserting America's might with increased vigor in concert with our gallant comrades."—William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury.

The First Bath Tub in the United States

Was Installed by Adam Thompson, a Cincinnati Tobacco Merchant, in 1842

H. L. Mencken, in Commerce and Finance, calls attention to the fact that December 20, 1917, has come and gone without any public celebration to mark that day as the seventy-fifth anniversary of the historic bath in which Adam Thompson of Cincinnati made history.

"There is a romance about the bath tub that is fascinating. Mencken, who has dipped deep into the waters of time, tells us that Thompson, who dealt in cotton, grain and tobacco in Cincinnati, and who went abroad occasionally by way of the Ohio and Mississippi and New Orleans, learned while in England of the remarkable fad that Lord John Russell had introduced. It seems that his lordship had fixed up in his home a remarkable contraption—a sort of glorified dishpan—and now and then, with the aid of a servant, laved his hide.

"Despite the ridicule to which he was subjected by this unusual practice, his lordship obstinately persisted in the belief that it did him no harm. Some Americans ever have been wont to ape the British, and Thompson, when he returned to America, began to think of ways and means whereby he might do as Lord Russell did. Being wealthy he was able to indulge himself in many ways.

"Therefore, he had a pump fitted on to the well at his home in Cincinnati. Six negroes worked this pump assiduously and managed to hoist enough water to fill a cypress tank in the garret of the Thompson mansion. That furnished a supply of cold water. As the weather was cold, Thompson, who was a bit of a genius, rigged up a coil of pipes in the chimney and the heat from the large grate fires warmed the pipes and the water within.

"The tub was the Adam of all bath tubs and was a noble addition to the world's possessions. It was designed on Thompson's order by a cabinetmaker, and its material was mahogany. It was seven feet long and four feet wide and weighed 1,750 pounds. To prevent the floor from collapsing under its weight the beams were reinforced and strengthened.

"In this luxurious tub Thompson took two baths on December 20, 1842—a cold one at 8 a. m. and a warm one some time during the afternoon. The warm water, heated by the kitchen fire, reached a temperature of 105 degrees. On Christmas day, having a party of gentlemen to dinner, he exhibited the new marvel to them and gave them an exhibition of its use, then four of them, including a French visitor, Colonel Duchanel, risked plunges into it.

"The next day all Cincinnati heard of it and the local newspapers opened their columns to violent discussions of it. On the one hand, it was denounced as an epicurean and obnoxious toy from England, designed to corrupt the democratic simplicity of the republic, and on the other hand, it was attacked by the medical faculty as dangerous to health and a certain inviter of 'phthisis, rheumatic fevers, inflammation of the lungs and the whole category of zymotic diseases.' (Quotation from the Western Medical Repository of April 23, 1843.)

"The noise of the controversy soon reached other cities, and in more than one place medical opposition assumed such strength that it was reflected in legislation. Late in 1843, for example, the Philadelphia Common Council considered an ordinance prohibiting bathing between November 1 and March 15, and it failed of passage by but two votes. During the same year the legislature of Virginia laid a tax of $30 a year on all bath tubs that might be set up. In Hartford, Providence, Charleston and Wilmington, Del., special and very heavy water rates were levied upon those who had bath tubs. Boston, early in 1845, made bathing unlawful except upon medical advice, but the ordinance was never enforced, and in 1862 it was repealed.

"But it was the example of President Millard Fillmore that, even more than grudging medical approval, gave the bath tub recognition and respectability in the United States. While Fillmore was still vice-president, in March, 1850, he visited Cincinnati on a stumping tour, and inspected the original Thompson tub. Fillmore was entertained in this house and, according to Chamberlain, his biographer, took a bath in the tub. Experiencing no ill effects, he became an ardent advocate of the new invention, and, on succeeding to the presidency at Taylor's death, July 9, 1850, he instructed his secretary of war, Gen. Charles M. Conrad, to invite tenders for the construction of a bath tub in the White House.

"This action, for a moment, revived the old controversy, and opponents of bathing made much of the fact that there was no bath tub at Mount Vernon or at Monticello. They declared that all the presidents and other magnificoes of the past had got along without any such Roman luxuries. But Congress, disregarding clamor, duly called for bids, and the contract was presently awarded to Harper & Gillespie, a firm of Philadelphia engineers, who proposed to furnish a tub of cast iron, capable of floating the largest man. This was installed in 1851 and remained in service in the White House until the first Cleveland administration, when an enameled tub was substituted. The example of the president soon broke down all that remained of the old opposition, and by 1860, according to the newspaper advertisements of the time, every hotel in New York had a bath tub, and some had two, and even three."

STRIPPING TOBACCO IN THE PARTAGAS FACTORY, HAVANA

INDIANA BECOMES ARID

Prohibition in the Hoosier State Causes the Closing of 3,400 Saloons—"Wets" Attack the Constitutionality of the Law.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 2.—Indiana became "dry" from border to border to-night at midnight. The state-wide prohibition law, so written that intoxicating liquor may not be manufactured, sold, given away or shipped into the state except for medical and sacramental purposes, took effect at that hour.

Members of the Indiana Anti-Saloon League estimated that 3,400 saloons in the state closed their doors. They estimated that thirty breweries in the state were affected, and possibly twelve to fifteen distilleries. The amount of money, the league members say, that has been spent annually for intoxicating liquor in the state is $25,000,000.

The closing of all places where liquor might be purchased followed strenuous efforts of the "wets" to have the law declared unconstitutional. The Indiana Supreme Court heard oral arguments in two cases involving the law to-day, but no decision was rendered. In one case a suit was filed by saloon men in Lake County, which resulted in the law being declared constitutional by the county judge, the oral arguments were heard before briefs were filed. The court intimated that an order will be made giving until Thursday of next week for the written briefs to be placed on file. The contention of the saloon men in the Lake County case was that the law gives a monopoly of the liquor business to pharmacists and therefore is unconstitutional.

The other case argued, originated in Evansville, resulting in the law being declared unconstitutional.

There was no intimation as to when the Supreme Court will decide the two cases.

"I once owned a Turkish pipe. It was wished onto me by Friend Wife, and I endeavored to show my appreciation of her thoughtfulness by smoking it every night. But when I made the discovery that it was costing me twenty cents a day for rose water to keep the thing smelling right, I sidetracked it by carefully upsetting it and breaking it while alone in the den one night." Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

Predicts That Reformers Will Tackle Tobacco Next

(An editorial excerpt from the Louisville Courier-Journal.)

That a campaign to abolish, by legislative prohibition, the use of tobacco, would follow the victory of the Prohibitionists in their campaign against alcohol has been stated by the Courier-Journal many times. Some readers have chosen to regard the statement as an effort to be amusing at the expense of the rampant Prohibitionists. Others have chosen to regard it as proceeding from a desire to represent the Prohibitionists as being more fanatical than they actually are. Of course the prohibition of tobacco would follow, logically, the prohibition of alcoholic beverages if the Prohibitionists could have their way, and if they can succed in prohibiting drink can they not succeed in prohibiting tobacco?

"Ours is government by majorities," says the man who likes his cigar or his pipe, "and practically everyone uses tobacco."

The prohibition of alcoholic beverages, by legislation invariably ineffective up to now, never has been accomplished by the votes of non-users of alcoholic beverages. Everyone hears, among his personal acquaintances, the voices of temperate drinkers and intemperate ones raised in behalf of probition, the temperate drinker urging it for the protection of the intemperate from temptation, the sot declaring in favor of it upon the ground that had there been prohibition he would not be a sot. Oftentimes the total abstainer is anti-prohibition, because he does not believe that one man should be regulated or reformed by what another man regards as good for him, and would prescribe not as a physician prescribes a remedy, but compulsorily.

Many users of tobacco, if they should be invited to vote for or against its use, would vote against it. The father of sons, perhaps a little too fond of his cigar, a sufferer from overindulgence, would vote against tobacco, as one who having experienced its illusory consolations, would protect inexperienced juniors. The man who chews the natural leaf, or some preparation of it, but believes that smoking is injurious, and that cigarettes are a curse fully equal to the curse of drink, in their effect upon boys, would not invariably vote for tobacco because of his love of his cud. All of the circumstances in which consumers of alcoholic beverages are willing to vote against whisky would influence consumers of tobacco to vote against tobacco. The tobacco growers are a handful by comparison with farmers in the United States as a whole who do not grow tobacco and who would prefer that their sons should not acquire a habit more or less deleterious, and that their employes should abstain from smoking and the fire risks it creates in the vicinity of the barn or other places of storage for combustible commodities.

The New York Commercial observes the signs of the times and says:

Prohibitionists are loud and long against sending tobacco to the soldiers in France and against the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross taking part in its distribution. Prohibition of tobacco is just as logical as prohibition of wine and beer, both of which were in common use all over Europe thousands of years before America and tobacco were discovered by white men. We laugh at the old blue laws, but we shall have them all again if our legislative bodies submit to other demands of the profesional reformers and prohibition lobbyist as abjectly as they are surrendering on the prohibition issue.

Why not? The blue laws were designed to suppress sin in the individual, regardless of the inclination of the individual. They were based upon the idea that society had the right to purge the individual of anything objectionable to the community, even worldliness, not for the protection of the community merely, but also for the salvation of the sinner. That is the platform of prohibition. After the prohibition of whisky, wines, beer, creme de menth, the prohibition of tobacco must follow or prohibitionism would be not only untrue to its ideals but also delinquent as to its opportunities for profitable agitation.

Speaking of profitable agitation, what would the professionals of Prohibition do after victory if there were nothing left about which to agitate?

What they would do, inasmuch as there is tobacco, a wayfarer though a fool should know. Consider the Golconda for the political adventurers which the wealth of the opposed tobacco interests would create. The brewers and distillers, to their own undoing rather than with any benefit to themselves, permitted themselves for years to be fleeced by costly opposition to Prohibition.

Tobacco factories are about as numerous and quite as rich in possibilities for exploitation as distilleries and breweries. Cigar stores are as numerous as saloons. Even tobacco growers might be "milked." Tribute from the tobacco trade and tobacco interests always in circumstances injuring it and aiding the Prohibitionists, could be taken for many years. The votes of women would go, largely, to tobacco prohibition. The pulpit would aid the movement fully as much as it has aided whisky prohibition. With "every prospect pleasing" the Prohibition leaders—who otherwise would be without an occupation—would undertake the Demon Nicotine as vigorously as they have undertaken the Demon Rum.

"Fund Doing Wonders"

Somewhere in France,
With the Sammies,
February 22, 1918.

Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund,
New York City.

My Dear Friends:

I received a box containing smokes and tobacco from you this date, 2/22/18, and it was sure welcome to me and the boys who are in the squadron with me. Inside on a card was the address of Mr. James Bartlet, 486 Elmwood avenue, Providence, R. I. I have written to Mr. Bartlet and thanked him for this present and I am going to take the liberty and the greatest pleasure to thank you the same way. And I hope you meet with the greatest success that can be met with in this campaign, for it is sure one great thing. If the people in the United States only knew how scarce tobacco is, in this country (France) they would not hesitate in helping you out. But on the other hand no one can realize how it is until they have seen it for themselves, and for myself I think the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" is one of the greatest and finest undertakings that has started since the war. I hope they will have the best of luck in this undertaking, and you can take it from me, you have all the boys in the trenches behind you as well as behind the good old U. S. A.

You can tell the people back in God's country not to forget the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," for they are doing wonders for us fellows over here, and if it were not for them I don't know what the boys would do, they all appreciate it very much.

I remain,
One of the Sammies in France,
1st Lt. Edw. J. Donovan
26th Aero Squadron,
American Expeditionary Forces.

PUFFING IT

Around me throng,
To hear my song,
All men, both white and black, O;
While I essay
A roundelay
In favor of Tobacco—
The leaf adored
By churl and lord.
Promoter of a pleasure
We could not buy
Tho' we should try
With all a Rothschild's treasure.

Words can't express
How we should bless,
With fervor and devotion,
Raleigh, who brought
With love and thought,
From lands beyond the ocean,
An antidote
For all that smote
Humanity with sorrow;
And from each face
Did care erase,
And smooth out ev'ry furrow.

Its fumes dispel
All griefs that dwell
Upon our minds, and eases
The wounded heart
From sorrow's smart—
It animates, and pleases.
As skywards curl,
With graceful swirl,
The perfumed clouds, they seem land
In which the mind
Doth pleasure find—
A paradisal dreamland.

—James Conway.

HOW OUR COUNTRY HAS DEVELOPED ITS WAR POWER

Mark Sullivan, in Collier's thus summarizes the achievements of the United States in a year. The figures show the extent of military preparations since the declaration of war.

ENGLAND'S SCANT SUPPLY

The Proper Distribution of Tobacco Is an Important Matter in Great Britain—An Explanation of the Situation.

If one could imagine such an unholy thing as a Government of puritanical non-smokers there would have been not control, but collapse. Fortunately, legislators are almost to a man smokers, and can understand the service of tobacco to the Forces afield and afloat and to the munition workers at home. Hence we have the mild tyranny of a Board of Trade who look upon the tobacco industry as an integral part of war activities. The facts of the situation are recognized, and theories which the facts belie get short shrift.

The tobacco trade has not had to fight for its existence. It has had to fight against too much appreciation of the goods it makes. If there is an unsatisfactory feature to-day it is how to keep the Forces and the domestic smokers going on dwindling stocks. Here again the State control comes in, and will, we predict, be the force to keep things going steadily in the factories. As we have before pointed out, control to restrict has a way of becoming control to keep up supplies. War experience would divide all manufacturers into two sections—one to be suppressed as making unessentials and one to be controlled because their output is too precious either to waste or to jeopardize.

To conserve and encourage the production of war essentials is a very proper function of government in war time. Possibly no set of people recognize this more thoroughly than do the producers themselves. Of course, all depends upon experience, which is the only test of what is essential. Tobacco having come out of that test on the right side, it only remains for the magnates of the various controls, whether of goods or of shipping, to arrange classes of goods in accordance with their degree of essentiality. The Food Controller the other day said the reason he was appointed and his object was to avoid industrial friction, or words to that effect. We all know that the Tobacco Control originated from the same cause. The first moves in both cases were, we believe, to combat and prevent profiteering. This object having been more or less attained, the functions of the Controls now tend to the still more important task of assuring supplies of essential commodities.

It was not till somewhat late in the day that the equation between tobacco usefulness and tobacco supplies occurred seriously to the Government. The idea that tobacco was a food, in that it has some of the powers of food, was not realized officially. Nor was it fully seen that tobacco was a golden key to the workman's heart. The cry for plenty of tobacco is the most democratic one after the demand for food. A keen observer noticed during the transport strikes of pre-war days that for some days all transport was help up by the strikers except vehicles conveying two commodities, which even strikers considered essential. One of these was tobacco, a magic word which acted as a talisman.

Those whose lot it has been to have close associations with the tobacco trade for many years necessarily study its problems. A man like the chairman of the Imperial Tobacco Co. is no greater and no less in this respect than the chairman of any other tobacco company who has had a life-long experience of the trade. As a tobacco manufacturer on a vast scale his views are of great moment as evidence, because his life has been spent in a close study, not merely of making tobacco, but of the problems of public taste and public requirements. The late Lord Winterstoke was also a man of this type, one whose success was bound up with a vivid and intimate knowledge of what the public require.

The present chairman of the I. T. C. is emphatically a man who knows what he is talking about when he talks of stocks. His remarks about the tobacco shortage cannot be dismissed as the biased plaint of an interested party. His dictum that "the stocks in this country have dwindled to a dangerously low point" means what it says. It does not mean merely dangerously low for industrial purposes, though that too is true. But the danger referred to is a national one, and it was in that sense that the pronouncement was made.

"Men would eat more if they could not get tobacco," was quoted. And, of course, the converse holds good that they would eat less if they had tobacco. Say a man in practice ate an ounce less bread each day because he was consuming two ounces of tobacco per week—both estimates quite moderate—he would would be saving five ounces of shipping each week. And if you multiply that man by 12,000,000 you would get 60,000,000 ozs., or 1,674 tons, of shipping saved in one week. If it is once admitted that such a saving does actually take place in the everyday practice of routine life, it follows that importing tobacco is saving tonnage and not wasting it—even in terms of food, which is the highest terminology conceivable, ranking, as it does, with or next to shells and aeroplanes.—London Tobacco.

MISS MARTHA WELSH

Miss Martha Welsh, representing the Nightingale Cigar Co., has been described in some of the big newspapers of the country as the "Emma McChesney of the cigar business." A successful saleswoman, proving her capability by securing an order for a million cigars, making good constantly in calling on the trade, she has reason to be proud of what she has done.

Selling goods is not a new thing for Miss Welsh to do. For, prior to entering the cigar industry, she sold stocks and bonds for a Boston and a New York firm. Before migrating from Boston, her home town, she did newspaper work and learned a great deal about human nature. Miss Welsh is so expert in closing sales that from time to time she has been called in by other big manufacturers to land special orders where regular salesmen have fallen down.

ELIMINATING CABARETS

Ordinance Adopted Almost Unanimously by City Council Will Cause Quite a Lot of Changes in Chicago.

By a vote of 63 to 2 the City Council of Chicago voted Tuesday a week ago to abolish cabarets in Chicago, the new regulation to become effective May 1. The ordinance decrees that no entertainment, except instrumental music, may be provided in any place where liquor is sold. Even places that provide instrumental music must secure the approval of the police and pay an extra license of $300. Furthermore, no bar permit can be issued to anyone charging an admission fee. Where intoxicants are not sold, any sort of a cabaret may be provided that complies with the law in other respects. The effect of the ordinance will be to materially change the character of some of Chicago's famous restaurants, but the hotel men of the city quite generally express their willingness to obey the law. A number of the leading hotels of the city had already discontinued their cabarets and will not be affected by the new ruling. The feeling expressed by those who are affected is that the measure was passed through the instrumentality of the brewers, and while some places will be hit, the general effect will not be hard to overcome. Some of the expressions of Chicago hotel men, quoted by the Hotel World, are as follows: Frank Bering, of the Hotel Sherman: "We'll abide by the law. I do think the passing of ice skating will be missed, for it has made Chicago talked of everywhere and has revived interest in ice sports." James Galbaugh, of the Morrison Hotel, said: "All our entertainments—cabaret, ice skating and dancing—must go, but in its stead we'll have as fine an orchestra as we can get. We'll build a stage where the ice was in Terrace Garden." Emil Demme, of the Hotel Bismarck, said: "We've had no entertainment but dancing, and in its place we'll have an orchestra." Neither the Blackstone nor the LaSalle will be affected by the change as they have not had any cabaret or dancing for some time.

Extra Efforts to Promote Liberty Bond Sales

Practically Every Philadelphia Cigar Dealer Will Be Actively Associated with the Good Work—Bushnell's Excellent Suggestion Adopted Unanimously by the Cigar and Tobacco Merchants' Association—Making Use of Many Store Windows—The Extension of the Schulte Chain—The Quaker City Exhorted to Clean Up—The Little Fellow and the Price Changes

PHILADELPHIA, April 2.—Nothing much but Liberty Bonds, or advertisements of these highly desirable and necessary adjuncts to any man's list of securities, will be visible in the bulk windows of most Philadelphia cigar stores next week, when the drive for the third loan will be started. Not only have the dealers here, members of the Philadelphia Cigar and Tobacco Merchants' Association, agreed to push the sale of bonds harder than they ever pushed even the six cent cigar, but they have also unanimously and formally voted to turn over at least one window next week to the sole display of Liberty Bond advertising.

This unprecedented move was suggested last week at the meeting of the association in the Adelphia Hotel by W. P. Bushnell, resident representative of E. M. Schwarz and Co. It went over the top without a dissenting voice. The association then also voted on and carried a motion by Samuel Beckett that the words "Recommended by the Philadelphia Cigar and Tobacco Merchants' Association" be printed on the bottom of the main placard to be used in the display. A placard is to be printed by the Association and distributed to all members. There will be a background of an American flag, but nothing else in the window—not even a cigar or a cigarette.

Five more new members have been rounded up for the association by the hustling membership committee. They are F. P. Hollinshead, Alva Ungelbuehler, C. G. Fanz, John M. Bauer and John A. Cohee.

That spring drive started by the Schulte chain here a few weeks ago, during which it was announced that objectives at Wilmington and Washington had been captured without resistance and that the firm is now consolidating gains in those towns preparatory to opening up, not to mention the new Trenton store, is about to be extended. This time a line of Schulte stores will be thrown clear across the state of Pennsylvania, in various cities and towns the names of which are withheld until sites are selected. In the meantime announcement is made that the new store at Broad and Walnut streets will be opened next Thursday with Ben Bernstein in charge. Mr. Bernstein was formerly manager of one of the Chicago stores in the Schulte chain, and more recently of one in Detroit. The local stores of the chain have just received an importation of the famous Missouri meerschaum, which had almost disappeared from the local market. They are selling, friend reader, at 13 cents or two for a quarter, but this includes a hard rubber stem.

Dan Ostrow, proprietor of the City Cigar Store at 7th and Chestnut streets, has added to his stock the line of Manuel Fernandez, of Tampa and Chicago, in six sizes selling at from 10 cents straight to three for a half. Dan has also stocked up heavily with El Producto, the G. H. P. Company's specialty, as a result of giving it a trial window display for a week. It brought in so many orders that Dan bought about a truck load.

Recent visitors to the local trade included John R. Hoffman, of Selak & Hoffman, Wilmington, Del., cigar makers; A. J. Diver, of the Cien Porciento Company, Porto Rican manufacturers of New York; D. Harry Mouesdale, of the Sanchez & Haya Company, Tampa, who spent a week at the headquarters of the local distributors, Leach and Company, 10th and Chestnut streets; W. S. Lakamp, of the Brunhoff Manufacturing Co., Cincinnati; E. Kleiner, of E. Kleiner & Co., Inc., and C. F. Patrick, manager of the Cigar Department of E. A. Saunder & Sons Co., Richmond, Va.

Another one of those bombshells has been exploded by the Secretary of the Navy in the quietude of the lanes and byways of this supposedly sanctified Quaker town. And it's the same old yarn of the lid having been removed. Secretary Daniels in his latest effusion, which is based on a report by Raymond B. Fosdick, who made an investigation for the Secretary, says the Philadelphia cops are in league with gamblers and organized vice, and perhaps he's right. But the Mayor is no more interested than he was when six or eight strong arm bulls busted into the cigar store of Harry Cohen down in the Fifth Ward last August and beaned Harry with blackjacks, thereby starting a reign of terror that didn't even wind up when a cop was murdered on September 18—as a matter of fact it hasn't wound up yet, and if you don't believe it, ask Harry or any other cigar dealer who don't vote the way the gang says is the "right way."

However, in spite of all this unpleasantness dealers here say the demand for their smokes is still growing, but so far Secretary McAdoo hasn't done much of anything to hurry along shipments. Every manufacturer in town is selling 'em as fast as he can make 'em, which isn't nearly as fast as it would be if he could only get about forty per cent more labor for his factory.

So many changes have been made in prices lately that the little feller in the outlying districts who tries to carry a full line of cigars and tobaccos and pipes and cigarettes and chawin' terbaccer, as well as a choice selection of social stationery and school supplies and small toys and candy and magazines and dry goods and tin whistles and so on, is having his hands full. We rambled into one such the other day to buy a popular brand of smoking tobacco and it took the gent behind the counter fourteen minutes by the clock to figure out just where he would get off if he let us ease out with a payment of six cents. He finally did, but he had a feeling at the back of his head while so doing that he was losing at least three dollars and a half. And the last thing he said to us was; "If you hear of a cheap adding machine send the owner around to see me. I'll pay him bimeby and take it off his hands."

Seriously, it is no joke. Yet the smoker is not kicking. More than a dozen retail dealers say so when they are asked what sort of a reception the public is giving to advancing prices. The answer, according to the dealers, is that most people have money now. Which brings up the point that the best time to get it is now.

ITALIAN TOBACCO TARIFF INCREASED

While the sale of tobacco in Italy is a Government monopoly and the importation of leaves, stalks and extract is prohibited, says the Gazetta Ufficiale, manufactured tobacco of foreign origin may be imported for individual use. The duties applicable to such imports have been considerably increased by a decree of January 3, 1918. These increases will remain in effect as long as the higher prices for retail sale fixed by a decree of August 23, 1917, are maintained by the monopoly. The accompanying table shows the old and new duties (lira, par value, 19.3 cents; k 2.2046 pounds):

Article.	Rate of Duty. New. Lire Per Kilo.	Old Lir Per
35 B—MANUFACTURED TOBACCO.
1. Manila and Havana cigars, imitation Havana cigars and cigarettes	50	3
2. Of any other quality	35	2

The weight of boxes containing tobacco f the above varieties for personal use is n included in the weight for duty, provided su boxes are of a kind ordinarily used as conta ers. Licenses must be obtained in Italy i the importation of tobacco.

A HIGH-PRICED HOGSHEAD.

By E. T. Robards, in the Southern Toba Journal, Major Ashcroft of Paducah, Ky., credited with telling a story of high toba prices.

"It happened in 1864."

Jack Anderson, a planter in Brandenbu neighborhood, an unusually fine grower a handler, one day took a hogshead of toba co to Hardinsburg to sell, and the best off he could get was $15 per hundred. He wa ed $20, so he refused the offer, and shipp it to Louisville, to the warehouse of Spra & Co. to sell on the hogshead breaks. H took the boat, and came on up to attend its sale.

On the day of sale, Anderson noticed o hogshead was started at $25, so he sli around to see Mr. Spratt, and asks, "Who hogshead is that?" Mr. Spratt went awa and the bids went on up to $35, and to $5 Anderson got nervous, and went to M Spratt again, and asked, "Did you say th was my hogshead?" Mr. Spratt turned a said, "Yes, I told you once, that was yo hogshead." Bids ran on up to $75 and to over $100.

Anderson was in a tremor, and nervou and for the third time he sought out M Spratt, and said, "Ain't you mistaken abo that being my hogshead?"

Mr. Spratt turned to him and sai "Damned if you don't get the money for it

The price ran on up to a final sale at $11 50 per hundred, for a class of tobacco th rarely in times of peace brought as much $10, and not infrequently nearer $5, per hu dred.

When Jack Anderson got his cash he pok it down his flank, and took the next boat f home. Reaching Brandenburg, he got on h horse, and lit out for home. When near t house, and seeing a light in the window, began hallooing; and on reaching the hous his wife seeing him unduly excited, and pulling out his "bank roll," showing it to he she said:

"Jack, where did you get all that money

Excitedly he tried to tell her he had s cured that for his hogshead of tobacco, wh she turned to him and said:

"No, Jack, you've been gambling."

St. Paul's Halo Is Composed of Prosperity

Cigar Trade Is Good in Minnesota's Capital

St. Paul, March 28, 1918.

Cigar and cigarette salesmen have been lentiful in St. Paul during the past week. ll report that business is showing a big ıcrease. Popular brands are hard to get beause the freight embargo has delayed many ıipments.

If better than in most cities retail prices re established in St. Paul, praise is due the ood work done by the St. Paul Cigar Dealrs' Association. There seems to be trouble rewing for the local manufacturers, and alks of pending raises to be demanded by ıe local cigar makers will take place hortly. The manufacturers are expecting rouble and will be prepared to fight the deıands.

"Do your bit" boxes are placed in all the igar stores. They collect smokes for the oldier boys who are "over there."

Rex, 16 for 10 cents, is a new cigarette eing placed with the dealers. Rex is made y the P. Lorillard Co.

Quite a few "Condax" displays are seen ow in St. Paul. These good cigarettes are oming back strong with the St. Paul mokers.

The St. Paul Cigar Dealers' Association is loing a lot of good work mainly in the way f having dealers put up prices so as to have verybody selling at a uniform price. They ssued a wholesale and retail price bulletin 'No. 1" a few days ago that will remain in orce until their next bulletin comes out, vhich will be April 10.

Florencio Vega & Co., of Chicago, have heir 5 cent Cuban smoker going good with everal of the larger dealers.

Bill Gates does the heavy work at Winecke & Doerr's main store. His fine window displays are original and they are creating a lot of talk.

The Olinda clear Havana cigar of Grommes & Uelrich, Chicago, and the Perfecto Garcia of Perfecto Garcia & Bro. are seen in many ases.

Gene Gates shows the following brands in is cases: Mi Lola, Muriel, Perfecto Garcia, Gato, Juan de Fuca and Americus. Gene is one of the hardest workers in the trade for he betterment of the retail conditions.

Geo. L. Samuels is the Lorillard booster around the saintly city and he is some booster. He has Murads right up in front ll the time.

Fred Forceen, formerly with the sales force of Thos. W. Short, is now at Camp Dodge, Iowa, having been called to the colors n the last draft.

Tom Moore cigarros have advanced in price. They now sell 10 for 20 cents.

Tuxedo tobacco has also advanced. All packings cost the consumer more.

Cincos find a ready sale with the smokers at the 6 cent price.

St. Marie Cigar & News Co. carries a big ine of cigars. The company shows in many sizes Tadema, Garcia and Vega, R. A. Bachia & Ca., Favorita de Cuba, Charles the Great, El Corso, Centropolis, Casa Vista, and Fraunce's Tavern. At present Condax cigarettes and Casa Vista cigars are displayed n the windows. Napoleon St. Marie is the head of this progressive firm and an untiring worker for the St. Paul Cigar Dealers' Association. Much credit is due him for the work he has done so far.

The W. S. Conrad Co. is boosting the Gato. They are putting Gato cigars in a lot of new places.

Graham Courtney cigars are sold here and the dealers who handle them report excellent business.

Lord Romeo short smokes are now sold at 15 cents the package of 6.

Thos. W. Short has a fine Condax cigarette display in his window.

R. R. Roberts, on Jackson Street, is featuring Darby and Joan, 3 for 25 cents, in foil packages. They are selling well.

Americus is a winner. The Western Grocery Co. job the brand here, and nearly every store is selling this popular cigar. Dealers say Americus has "gone over" big.

Sight Draft cigars, now sold at 6 cents, have not lost any of their friends since they left the 5-cent class. The Conrad Co. reports sales as large as ever on this staple seller made by Gresh & Co.

Billy Bounce 5-cent smokers have bounced into several St. Paul cases. They are made by the Coraza Cigar Factory, of Milwaukee.

Winecke & Doerr have a fine Dutch Masters display. This brand of the Johnson Cigar Co., of Grand Rapids, is one of the quick sellers with this house.

Keywesters, made by Gato at Key West, are hitting the high spots, and you can see them on many show cases. They sell for 6 cents. Fred Oakes makes this field for the factory.

Gene Gates has added the Tuval & Sanchez and Haya brands in many fine sizes to his stock. They will be featured by Gates at his two stands.

Muriel short smokes are now on the market. They sell 10 for 25 cents and come to the dealers in cartons of 10 boxes.

Thos. W. Short is doing a bigger business than ever. He uses as leaders El Sirrah, Gato, Henry the Fourth, Coraza, Mozart, Mi Hogar and American Maid, in many sizes. He is an up-to-date retailer with much "pep."

Harry W. Johnson in his chain of stores plays strong on Mozart, Jan Kubelik, Lovera Lucella, and Emseco.

Norman Starr, of Kuhles & Stock, besides being a manufacturer is an A1 salesman. He has many fine accounts in St. Paul.

Helios are featured by the St. Paul Drug Co. They go over the counter at 5 cents.

At the Lowry Building cigar store a large Murad window attracts much attention.

T. W. Tuchets Sons, local manufacturers, do well with 2-Chelt cigars, which they make in a variety of sizes.

Gus Kafka has two good sellers in the Norma and Liederkranz cabinet brands from R. Steinecke & Co. Gus has one of the best box trades in town and features many fine lines.

The W. & D. Panatelas, controlled by the Minneapolis Drug Co., are moving at a merry gait.

The New Papoose 5-center is now sold in several stores. They are made in Davenport, Iowa, and start out like a Derby winner.

Cuba Linda, from Ruy Suarez & Co., is handled here by Napoleon St. Marie.

Kuhles & Stock Co. is the maker of the All Stock jitney smoke, in big demand in St. Paul, Minn.

Tom Connors, representing E. P. Cordero & Co., was a recent trade visitor.

Frank's pipes are in demand. A full line is carried by the dealers that feature pipes.

Byron Lederer, known to the cigar trade throughout the country, is in town. Lederer is now in a different line of business and is doing well.

The St. Paul Hotel cigar stand endeavors to please customers. They carry Van Dyck, Olinda, Americus, La Preferencia, Webster, Harvester, La Paleina and many other brands. A full line of Upman and La Coronas are featured in the imported case.

The Best & Russell store is displaying Robert Burns.

Flora Mia, a new 6-center from A. Santaella y Ca., has reached town.

El Verso keeps right on a-going. The business on this popular cigar is very large.

La Palina, from the Congress Cigar Co., Chicago, increases in sales. You can hardly step into a store now and not find this brand.

Another one of the big sellers is El Roi Tan, which is jobbed by Stone, Ordeau & Wells Co. "Some seller."

Kotton cigarettes, from 'way down South, are in demand.

Dick Roberts' leaders are Mi Hogar, Romeo Garcia and Charles the Great in five sizes, and Three R Special and Donzella in the 5-cent line. Dick also carries many other brands.

Marc Antony, from Berriman Bros., is handled by the Western Grocery Co.

Helmar and Murad displays are numerous in the down town section.

The dealers who carry candy as a side line have advanced all 5-cent pieces to 6 cents.

La Venga clear Havana, made by Celestino Vega & Co., of Tampa, is jobbed in St. Paul by Winecke & Doerr.

The Endicott Cigar stand features La Integridad, Gato, El Sirrah, Mozart, American Maid, Henry the Fourth and Eden brands.

Walls Court, from F. Lozano Sons, and La Azora, are "it" at the retail stores of Winecke & Doerr.

The Paul Jones and Broadwell brands, made by A. & S. Valentine Sons, of Philadelphia, are well distributed here.

"If tobacco dealers cannot do business on a profit of less than 25 per cent, then there must be too many dealers," appeared in one of the daily papers. The association quickly called that newspaper's attention to the statement and in trying to set the matter right it was said the remark in question was based upon the assumption that the profit mentioned was net. "The dealers wish it was."

Fred Suss, of R. Steinecke & Co., and Harry L. Harris, of Harris-Schwarz Co., both called on the trade and found business good.

Magno shade grown wrapped cigars from L. Sanchez, Tampa, are sold by R. R. Roberts.

Hart & Murphy are the makers of the El Firina brand, which is firmly entrenched with the St. Paul trade.

"Going just as big as ever," is the word from the Kuhles & Stock Co. when asked how Aquilas, their leading seller, was progressing.

Business at the Ryan Hotel cigar stand is good. It ought to be, as they carry a large variety of fine brands.

Little Tom, now 6 cents, and Tom Moore are jobbed by Winston, Harper & Fisher.

Camels are going at 16 cents a package of 20. They are leading the field in sales.

In the newspapers is an ad calling the smokers' attention to the fact that Sight Draft cigars are now 6 cents.

Fleur de Venice, from Marcus Feder & Co., Cleveland, sell 2 for 15 cents. They come in foil packages.

Jos. P. Whitwell, of the North Star Tobacco Co., is hard at work on Robt. Burns and Little Bobbies. J. P. W. is a hard worker and has a big following.

Frank J. King controls the La Palina, San Felice and El Rayo brands for St. Paul.

Roman Dobler, representing Park & Tilford, is expected here in a few days.

Lovera shade grown wrapped is now being placed with the trade.

A Fiesta in the Philippines

In 1882 the Tobacco Monopoly in the Philippine Islands was ended by a decree of the Governor General. The natives of the towns and villages joyously celebrated the event by holding fiestas in the northern provinces of Luzon where the greater part of Philippine tobacco is grown. This monopoly had continued in operation for a hundred years and during that time "Manila" cigars found a ready market and won a splendid reputation when permitted to reach the shelves of cigar and tobacco dealers in countries where tariff laws did not prevent their importation.

Manila cigars of standard quality maintained by the Philippine Government have repeated their successes in the United States during the past two years.

Tampa Cigar Shipments Expedited and Increased

Government May Use Tampa Bay Hotel as a Hospital for Convalescent Soldiers —Box Manufacturers Advance Prices Again—Cuesta, Rey & Co. Have an Exhibit in Washington—Eli Witt Acquires Control of the Havatampa Co.—Tampans Buy $100,000 Worth of War-Savings Stamps

TAMPA, March 30.—Represented by Lieut. Charles Ganz, Surgeon General Gorgas has notified the Tampa Board of Trade that the War Department would very much like to have the Tampa Bay hotel for use as a hospital for convalescent soldiers brought back from France, and the topic, involving Florida's most famous hostelry, is naturally the most interesting being discussed in the city at present. The board is opposed to granting the hotel for this use, unless the need therefor is imperative, and the suggestion has been made that the citizens erect a hospital for the government at Sulphur Springs, a health resort six miles from the city. If Gen. Gorgas insists upon having the Tampa Bay, home of cigar manufacturers for years, however, it will be given the government without complaint.

Transportation conditions have improved somewhat lately, as a result of which the manufacturers are able to ship cigars and bring in material to better advantage. They have been greatly handicapped since the embargo went into effect, but continued improvement of conditions is expected from now on.

Tampans to date have invested $96,385.09 in War Savings Stamps, and before nightfall a record of $100,000, is expected to be made. The city leads Jacksonville, Pensacola and other municipalities of Florida by a wide margin in this phase of war work.

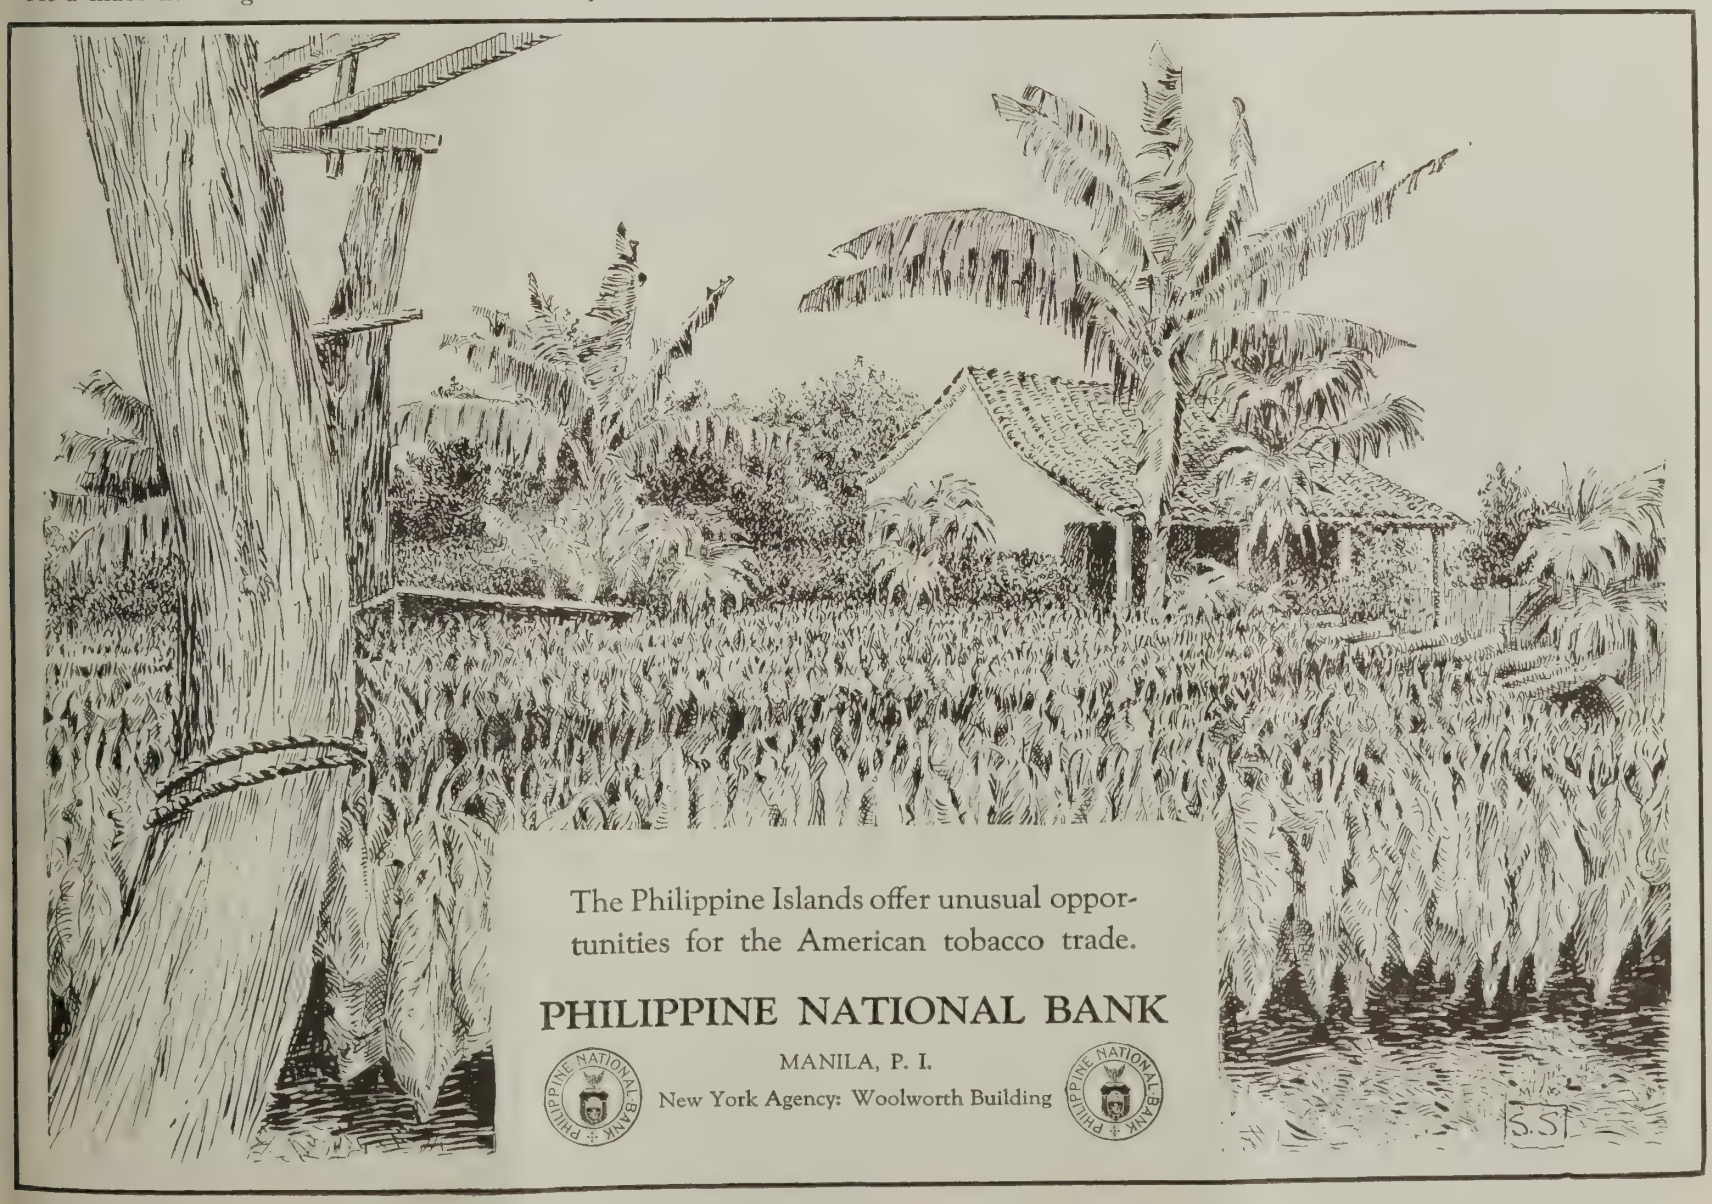
At a mass meeting of the Board of Trade, held Friday night, members declared that they would stand solidly behind T. Ed. Bryan, nominated unanimously for the presidency of the body, in any undertaking in behalf of the city or section. Efforts are being made to have Mr. Bryan continue as head of the cigar manufacturers' bureau of the Board, but it is not thought that he will be able to do so.

Being dissatisfied with the failure of the present Board of Port Commissioners to respond to the demands of the engineer department of the government that certain harbor facilities be provided by the city in return for an appropriation that will give Tampa's harbor a depth of 27 feet, prominent citizens this week nominated candidates for membership of the commission against the incumbents, a majority of whom seek re-election. Unless the city accedes to the demands of the engineers it is feared that the appropriation will be lost.

Congressman Herbert J. Drane, representing this district, has a display of Florida products in his office in the House Office Building at Washington. Among these is an exhibition of cigars manufactured by Cuesta, Rey & Co.

Phillip Pfahl, a German-born employe of the Tampa Box factory, was today forced to leave his work by American employes, who insisted that, although he has taken out his first naturalization papers, he is not an American at heart. Pfahl was formerly employed by the Tampa Shipbuilding & Engineering Co., a German-managed institution which has been the subject of much criticism, and was forced out of his position by the government.

Local box factories have announced a further increase in the price of cigar boxes, making an increase of 100 per cent or more during the past two years. The price increases announced are as follows: Three cents per box on orders for one size of less than 20 boxes, two cents on from 20 to 50 boxes and 1 cent on from 50 to 100 boxes. No present increase is made on larger orders.



Ben Cosio, of Jose Lovera & Co., who has been indisposed for several days, is convalescent.

Jose Lozano of F. Lozano Sons & Co., who left for New York last week to take his sister home, is expected to return early next week.

Mortimer Regensburg, head of the Regensburg factories, is still in the city. He is expected to return to New York next week.

Eli Witt, local distributor, has bought the controlling interest in the Havatampa Cigar Co., which manufactures the Tampa Nugget cigar. Mr. Witt is also trying to get a contract for furnishing cigars to the two army aviation camps at Arcadia, Florida.

Arnold Falk, cigar manufacturer, has leased for a long term of years a large property at Conti and Chartres streets, New Orleans, diagonally opposite the new courthouse, and will convert it into a modern "daylight" factory. The new factory will have about 22,000 feet of the floor space. The property comprises a four-story brick building with an annex, and is owned by the Mercier Realty Co. The factory working force will be largely increased, and various conveniences installed for the comfort of the employes.

Perkins Makes Ready for Third Big Drive

Chairman of the New England Tobacco Committee Has Made Excellent Arrangements to Accelerate Sales of Liberty Bonds—It Is Easy to Sell Good Cigars in Massachusetts—Boston Optimism Isn't Entirely Induced by Fine Spring Weather—Tucker & Co. of Lynn Have Retired from Business

BOSTON, April 2.—Chairman Charles B. Perkins, chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee representing the tobacco trade in New England, has made arrangements for the Third Big Loan drive. All retailers in greater Boston have agreed to display in their windows and stores posters distributed by the Federal Reserve Bank, and insert in all their mail, circulars advertising the loan; the jobbers will have Liberty Loan posters on all their delivery trucks.

Chairman Perkins personally is visiting dealers emphasizing the importance of subscribing heavily as possible, as well as to have them urge their employes to buy all they can afford, and furthermore to assist employes in purchasing, by allowing them to pay a small amount each week until the bond is paid for.

D. Emil Klein, of E. M. Schwartz Co. was here for a few days last week. He reports that the New York factories acceded to the demands made by the strikers and all are back to work again.

It is easy to find buyers in stores outside of Boston. There was a time when a salesman, calling on the trade in New England cities, would bat for about five hundred; now his average is boosted to one thousand. The reason for this change is the scarcity of help. The boss has got to put in some good long hours now, as they open early and close late.

Frank Lopez, representing Garcia & Vega, was saying "how de" to his old time friends this last week. Frank is home in Boston, as it was from the Hub of the Universe that Frank first started on the road. He has a big following in clubs and hotels here. Garcia & Vega cigars are appreciated by smokers who desire quality.

The United Cigar Stores Co. opened a new store at the corner of Summer and Kingston street, and Superintendent Pearson did a wonderful piece of work, moving from one store to the other without interrupting business in either store. It was some stunt.

Fred Suss, of R. Steineke Co., returned to his home town after a successful Western trip.

Al Korn, representing S. Furgatch & Co., is wasting away to a ton. Say Al! what are you doing with your old clothes? Each visit he has a new suit, outgrowing the one worn on the previous visit. He claims it's all the fault of eating War Bread. Maybe it is. Cut out the war bread, just take it without food.

Charles B. Perkins and Al Heanault, of Charles B. Perkins Co., visited all the Summer resorts on the South Shore last week, booking the heaviest bunch of business for the Summer Hotels that they ever secured.

George Hall, of the Adams House, returned from Palm Beach last week.

Arthur Barr, shipper for Baker Bros., is liable to be taken in the next draft, as well as Eddie Dugan, who travels the North Shore for Baker Bros. He has passed his examinations for the Aviation branch of the service.

El Arabe cigar, made by the Benito Ovira Co., is handled in all the best selling shapes b William McGreenery, the Merchant's Ro retailer and jobber. El Arabe has made goo with the consumers in this section of the cit

Rosenthal Bros. & Bendetson have adde another truck to their delivery system. Th new car is resplendent with Muriel Cigar Ad vertisements. Muriel sales have grown im mensely in Greater Boston.

April 19, Anniversary of the Battle of Lex ington and Concord, also is the day whe nearby Summer resorts open up, and th boats start running. A few more weeks o good weather such as we have had this week will start things going in the right directio Jobber's salesmen are flocking to resort loading up the trade for the opening day.

Mr. Norris, formerly assistant manager o the Ocean House, Swampscott, Mass., ha leased the Cliff House, Winthrop Highlan Mass., and has a large booking for the Sum mer. The hotel is now open and well fille

Some of the Summer hotels will not ope this year on account of the help question. Sal aries paid at these places are not large, y they are as big as the house can stand, an such help can get work elsewhere, havin shorter hours and being better paid.

Tucker & Co. at Lynn, Mass., have gone ou of business. Harry Hooper who manage this business for many years, is taking a need ed rest, after which he has several proposi tions, in the tobacco trade, that he may con sider.

In Nyasaland, Africa, the tobacco crop ha suffered severely from the ravages of th tobacco beetle.

Taking a Long Glance at Cigar Trade Conditions

Up-State Dealer Recommends Mixing the Goods in the Cases

New York State Capitol District
April Fool, 1918.

"Holy pickerel!" gasped Benny, passin' outa 25-cent certificate for a nickel-coupon wit' a sack of Bull Durham, "Didcha hear, Mr. Ash, that th' War 'Partment has put th' crossed fingers on all cigarette an' tobacco shipments to our fellers in France?"

"Yep, that's jest wha' they done! None uv our soldiers Over There can't even git a bundle a-smokes now from Cousin Kate 'less they gits up a petition ter th' kernel er som'-body, have it K. O.'d, mail it over here, then make Sister Sue or th' lawful 'tested notary-wit'-seal relative or fren' show th' pay-pers to th' properly constituted 'thorities at th' express or postoffice!"

"By that time, a-course, th' frankfutters will be back in Frankfort, th' scrap'll be a hist'ry subjict in th' high-school, an' th' fightin'-felly who wanted th' smoke'll be marchin' in th' Decoration Day peer-ade, carryin' Willie Hohenzollern's double black-eagled banner as a trop'y."

"An', at th' present time, wholesale an' retail houses lik' this here firm uv Stubb & Ash, will be obliged to git 'long wit' out th' business of sellin' t'ings ter th' many, many Sisers o' Sailors an' Soldiers who defend th' American Eagle where smokes is importanter than th' general-in-command!"

"Here's 'nother funny t'ing," continued Benny. "And that is th' floppin' of Jolly Jim Emerson. Why, for years an' years Jim o' Warrensburgh has bin knockin' th' stuffin' outa anti-saloon leagues, W. C. T. U.'s an' all odder dry-as-dust 'sociashuns."

"An' now he quits th' wet fight in th' legislatter, an' he goes over ter th' prohibs wit' th' treemenjous inflooence of his Senate chairmanship an' vote! This, then, leaves th' wets wit' still one ballot ter th' good. But it looks kinda dry an' dusty fer th' wets at that, 'cause th' prohibs are breakin' thru th' saloon 'trenchments lik' Carrie Nation goin' over th' top in a British tank shootin' ice water at th' enemy!"

"Meantime," commented Mr. Ash, "I see that th' soda fountains are doing more business than ever. Why, during the noon rush, right down there on Broadway, at the Warner Drug Co. branch, men stand in there three deep frequently, waiting for a turn at the temperance drinks."

"And, I note, too, that the center window of this store continues to boost the Estabrook & Eaton line for Harry Stearns. Last week they featured the Fame cigar. This week the display consists of the Marguerite brand. This is an excellent advertisement for these Boston cigars."

"Over on the other corner," went on Sam Ash, as he set the clock once more to keep pace with the gained time of daylight saving. "Corporal John Friendt tells me that Manager Shaxby of the J. W. Stevens store has been sick a week with a bronchial difficulty."

"He came back on the job Tuesday, but was forced to get in bed again and stay there. So John has been on duty almost continuously for several days. Proprietor Stevens helps at the desk."

"Good evening, gentlemen," saluted a voice from the grand entrance to the big tent, and Panul Wessells walked in. "How is the cigar business?"

"Oh, so-so," responded Mr. Ash carelessly, as he sold a thrift-stamp to a customer too old to fight the Kaiser, but not too old to help win the war. "If I could sell cigars like thrift-stamps, we'd have to buy another cash register with multiple drawers to store the quarters."

"Then push the Robert Burns and the Owls," advised Paul, "and you'll be surprised to see what a largely increased trade you'll have from smokers who appreciate both thrift and good cigars."

"Good cigars reminds me, Jim," said Mr. Ash to his partner, Jim Stubb, "that the Arcade Cigar Co., at 568 Broadway, are selling quite a few Dubonnet goods. And they say that there isn't a better buy in Albany just now than that brand o'smokes."

"About this time next Monday," remarked Sam Ash, flipping an advance-postal in the memo-drawer of his mahogany desk, "I suppose I'll have to dig up an order for After-Dinner Greenwald. For this here card says as how he'll be lookin' in for an order of cigars to mail to the Inter-Borough in New York. So we'd better let him book us, Stubb, for some more of those Seidenberg goods."

"Sure," agreed Jim Stubb, strikin' a match to a Henrietta, "an' we'd also better tell Jim Stuart to put us down for another lot of Cincos before Eisenlohr boosts th' price to 7-cents, 3 for 20. That new 5-cent Cinco may sell, too, so we'd oughta have some of each. This 6-cent game ain't what it's cracked up to be, not by a long-shot, Sam."

"That's just what Billy Orr told me, not an hour ago," answered Sam, while making the notations to order the Seidenbergs and Cincos. "Yes, Billy came down from Gloversville today, coverin' th' trade in th' Capitol District on his Eccentric brand. An' he spoke about this six-cent business. He seems to believe you can't sell many six an' seven-cent cigars 'round here unless th' dealer mixes 'em up in his cases with th' better stuff.

"For instance, Jim, you know how it is in your own cases. There we've got th' imported goods 'way up front, all set apart by theirselves. Next comes a line of 15-cent an' two-for-a-quarter clear Havana an' blended brands. Then, stragglin' along, are th' domestic straight tens, three-for-a-quarter, four-for-a-quarter, seven, six, an' what's left of th' five-centers.

"But Bill's idea, Jim, is to mix th' cheaper stuff with th' better, all thru th' cases. His argument is reasonable, too, for he says a man comes in to buy a cigar for a nickel, say, an' he finds it in th' new six-cent class. Alright. But it isn't alright. Because, this feller feels sore over th' penny raise, an' just for spite, won't buy th' six-center.

"So, lookin' 'round, he spots a three-for or a straight cigar which looms up big, an' he buys that. Right there, then, Billy reasons th' mixed case is superior. Otherwise, th' smoker in doubt might go down th' line an' sell himself som' stogies."

"How's Billy Orr find th' jobbin' trade in Gloversville, Sam?" asked Jim Stubb, knockin' th' ash of his Henrietta in Sam's re-finished Easter Stetson, model o'17.

"Oh, Billy admits business is fair, goods hard to get, money harder yet, an' prices generally offensive. His own ten-cent Eccentric has gone to $73. So he urges th' retailers to buy th' bigger-an'-better two-for-a-quarter size, made of finer silk, an' edged with thicker velvet for th' dealer.

"Tho, all in all, Jim, Billy Orr is pretty well satisfied with conditions up-State. For he's a distributor who swims up-stream, never down, like a dead-one. An' he says, even tho Fulton an' Herkimer Counties have got enough snow to run 'em thru to th' Fourth o'July, they've also got lots of good air an' pure water to sell th' down-State fol when they come up in th' mountings thi summer for th' annual ten-days of wreckrea tion."

"Speakin' of Billy Orr, Sam, reminds m that I saw Scott Gillespie last week," relate Jim Stubb, droppin' th' balance o'his Hen rietta ashes under th' sweat-band of Sam' pearl-gray helmet.

"W. Scott Gillespie of Kingston, eh? placed Sam immediately, thinkin' of th' al ways pleasant greetin' sure to be extende by th' warm hand of th' this fine old-tim cigar man. "When was he here?"

"Last Wednesday, I think," recollecte Jim, puttin' th' stump of his smoke, like feather, in Sam's hat-ribbon, while th' afore said Sam remained oblivious to everythin atop th' desk 'cept that Jim Stubb was som ere leanin' there while he, Sam, endeavore to finish his excess profits report before th Internal Revenue Collector, down there i th' Albany Federal Building, sent a deput aroun' to seize 'im at noon today. For, a th' offices of Collector Roscoe Irwin, also o Kingston, notices were tacked on th' walls tellin' each an' ev'ry one that 'twas no Apr Fool not to have all income reports in thi 14th New York District right in th' hand of Uncle Samuel today, sure.

"An' another one of your old customer was in town th' other day, too, Sam," wen on Jim, tryin' his darndest to innocently in terrupt Sam Ash in his nervous effort t compute gross, net, an' excess.

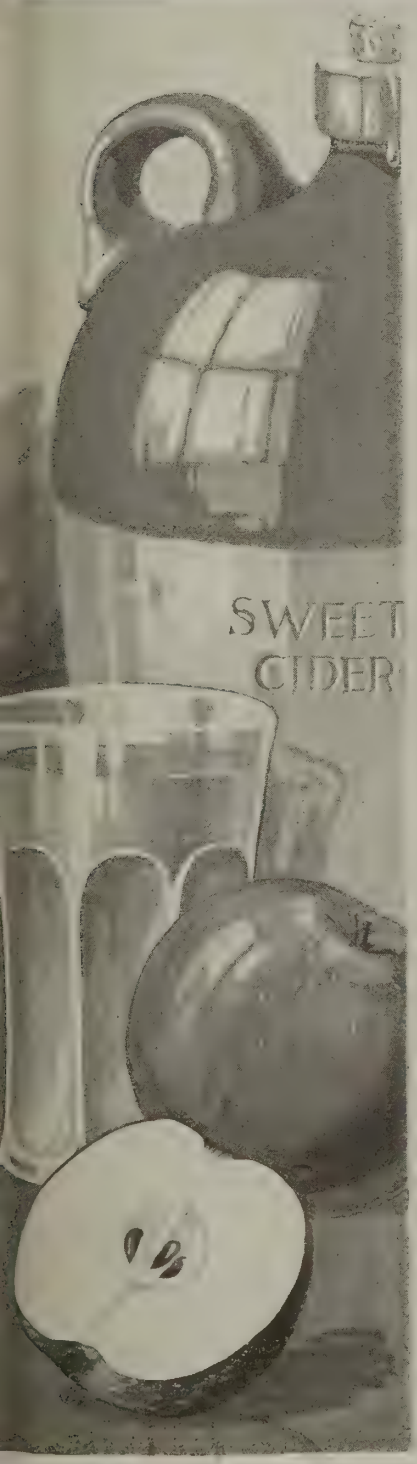
"Who's that?" inquired Sam, gettin' hi figgers mixt, an' spillin' a drop of nice carter fluid on th' narrer dotted line reserved fo deductions.

"It was R. J. Loy of Cobleskill, Sam, ar he wanted to know when you're goin' to shi those cigars you promised him a month o six weeks ago," incited Jim, slyly.

Sam Ash erased th' blot, then looked up a Jim Stubb, glaring angrily: "Say, see here Jim, if you can do this job while I talk, tr it! An' those cigars you know blame we are tied up some'ere 'tween Haarlem ar Honolulu. So if you'll kindly go 'way fror this place 'till I get thru, I'll be much obliged I'm sure!"

An' Jim, realizin' Benny'd be accused c fixin' Sam's chapeau with th' appropriate as decoration, retired a-chuckle to th' retail de partment, where he sighted his friend, A. N Duker chattin' with Benny.

"Lo, Mr. Stubb," says Duker, "any nev prices effective this day an' date? You knov most dealers are now getting 6-cents for Bu Durham. And Tuxedo is running all the wa from 11 to 15-cents. Piper Heidsieck is sti going strong at 7 and 15 cents. Other A T. Co. brands are advancing steadily, so you' better get as much stuff as you possibly ca before more circulars arrive."



"Yeh," chimed in Benny, "Everytime w fire in an order fer goods th' factory is eithe oversold or else we git first crack at th' nev sizes at th' advanced prices. Why, jes' nov I cut th' seams on som' cartons uv Mecca an' Luck Strikes. An' there I finds 20 i each cup fer th' holy-kickin' price uv 15 cents, instid uv 16 fer a dime!

"Gee-ja!" declared Benny, puttin' on som revised pricestickers to th' bins of cigaret he'd just mentioned. "There's at least on good t'ing 'bout this biziness now. An' tha lil' t'ing is that there ain't no new brand comin' out every twelve minits, lik' ther uster be afore th' groanin' shelves starte th' bolsheviki!"

"I see som' new make-ups behinst th' ci gar-cases at th' Ten Eyck Hotel," observe Benny, whilst he removed thirty-one pennie from th' match-machine, replacin' thirty-tw boxes of safeties, made in Nippon, to fill th void.

Chicago Trade Gets Spring Benefits

Short Reports Concerning a Lot of Hustling Cigar Dealers

CHICAGO, March 28.

The Spring drive is now on and everybody is busy brushing up after the long winter. Business has shown a big improvement since the dealers have been able to keep their doors open. A shortage of many brands continues and prices change every day; six cent cigars are showing a little life but have not made much headway as yet, due perhaps to the fact that most every dealer still has 5 cent cigars to offer the consumer.

Fred Oakes has returned from a visit to Grand Rapids and Kalamazoo where he called on Gato customers.

Oasis cigarettes are now selling at 11 cents for the package of 20.

In all the Breitung stores Windsor Castle cigarettes are displayed. The four and twenty smokes sell for 20 cents. For a newcomer they are winners.

Ernest Heyman, who for the past few years travelled the northwest for the Falk Tobacco Co. and who resigned his position a short time ago, has returned to Chicago and bought the East End Smoke Shop at 1202 E. 47th street. This store is one of the most up-to-date retail establishments on the south side and carries a big stock. Ernie will devote his time from now on to the store.

Harley J. Benjamin, formerly of Aurora, Ill., is a new man behind the counter at the Borland Building cigar store, Monroe and La Salle streets. He is a hustling young chap and makes friends fast.

"Cut" prices on cigars at Rotchilds last Saturday were as follows: Roi Tan, belvedere size, 5 for 35 cents, $3.45 for 50; La Azora puritanos, 5 for 33 cents, $3.25 for 50; John Ruskin or Tom Keene, 5 for 25 cents, $2.45 for 50; La Azora Operas, 6 for 25 cents, $1.98 for 50.

Clark Cutler ran up to Milwaukee a few days ago and arranged for Oscar Buxbaum, the jobber, to handle Moises Bustillo & Co.'s line.

Perfecto Garcia & Bros. are now putting out to the trade their Chesterfield and Director 2 for 25 cent sizes and the Merchant 10 cent size of the Perfecto Garcia brand.

Sol. M. Bernstein & Co. have succeeded Bernstein & Schley. They have just taken on the Masetto clear Havana brand of cigars.

Clever cut out signs are seen in many windows featuring San Felice 6 cent cigars.

The Clayton Cigar Co. has taken on El Symphonie 6 cent cigar. This brand is made by Menelsohn Co. of Cleveland.

Ruhstrat Crowley Co. is distributing to the trade large cut out window signs advertising La Fendrich 10 cent cigars.

Iwan Ries & Co., 104 North Wells street, are Chicago distributors for Wellington London A new size of Prince Albert in bags Mixture, Our Monogram, Del Monte and Perique Mixtures, made by H. Bohlo & Co. of San Francisco. They are packed in 2, 4, 8 and 16 oz. cans. The first shipment has reached here and is now being placed with the trade. Attractive advertising signs go out with each order.

John Early is showing Cuesta Rey cigars in his window on La Salle street.

New retail prices in effect, are: Rameses 10's advanced to 25 cents, 20's to 50 cents; Fatoco, London Sherbet, Hash Brown and Manhattan Cocktail 1½ oz from 10 to 12 cents. Egyptian Prettiest from 11 to 13 cents, London Sports from 12 to 13 cents.

A new size of Prince Albert in bags of 1¼ oz. sells for 10 cents. Dills Best cut plug, 1½ oz., also a new size, sells for 13 cents or 2 for 25 cents. Tuxedo ⅞ oz. bags retail for 6 cents while the 1⅝ oz. tin sells for 11 cents. Edgeworth ready rub, 1½ oz. has advanced from 11 to 13 cents.

A new packing of Lucky Strike cigarettes will soon be on the market. It will sell at 15 cents the package of 20. The present 16 package continues to be sold at 10 cents.

Helmars are advertised heavily in all the Chicago newspapers.

Harry Totten, the stogie prince, is filling in his spare time placing the brands of Leopold Powell & Co. Harry "took on" this line a short time ago and already has opened up some nice accounts for the Espina brand. His field is from Chicago to the coast and he is going to step some. His "It's a Bear" stogie is just as popular as ever, in fact he can't keep the trade supplied.

Gato Keywesters have advanced. Palmitas go to 7 cents and Favorites to 3 for 25.

Ed. Fisch is now "hitting them" out for G. W. Faber, Inc. He is covering his old field and meeting with much success.

Lee Breslin is working the loop trade for McNeil & Higgins Co.

"Time for a Melachrino," reads the display of Melachrino cigarettes that is built around the clock at L. C. Widducks store, 116 North La Salle street.

Sidney Cohen, always welcome to our city, is here. Sid is booming Admirations and reports business to be very big.

Sub Rosa little cigars have "gone up." Six cents is the new price the consumer must pay.

Jos. Feiger, Chicago manager for A. Schulte, has returned from a visit to the Detroit stores. Feiger supervises the Detroit stores in addition to his Chicago duties.

Calling on many dealers, Ludwig Lasker received a royal reception. "Lud" could preach nothing but Perfecto Garcia to his friends. He found them in the best stores.

The Girard cigar is going to play a big game for popularity. Its new jobbers, Iwan Ries & Co., are going to run quarter page ads in the Chicago Examiner. Girards already have been placed in hundreds of stores and Ries & Co. are far behind filling orders because railway conditions delay goods in transit from the factory.

W. W. Rosoboro and Clark Cutler paid the Milwaukee trade a visit last week. New accounts for M. Bustillo & Co.'s brands secured during their visit were Floyd Byrum and the University Club.

It is reported now that A. Schulte shortly will open in Milwaukee and St. Paul. Locations have already been selected.

McNeill & Higgins Co. job the El Grado, a 4 for 25 cent cigar made by Kraus Cigar Co.

At the Hotel Sherman cigar department, a good sale is reported on Cyrilla clear Havana cigars made by Julius Fernbach & Co., Chicago.

Many & Koehn, Chicago's newest cigar manufacturers, are now hard at work placing the Shrine brand of cigars with the local dealers. Shrine is made in all sizes from 5 cents to 3 for 50c.

L. C. Widduck, Al Reagen and several other cigar men have been under the weather suffering from the grippe.

Al Tierney, who now owns the Colonel buffet, is showing Flor de Chas. Comiskey clear Havana cigars, making a very attractive window display.

Heilbronner & Jacobs of Philadelphia do well here with their Havana Brown 5 cent cigar. Several loop dealers carry them in stock.

Issy Schey, formerly of Bernstein & Schey, has opened a retail store at 312 West Van Buren street.

The United is featuring Ricoro in all their displays. The 7 and 8 cent sizes are selling "fine."

Murad, Helmar and Nebo window strips are seen pasted on nearly every cigar store window at present.

Fred Oakes reports that Gatos have advanced in price.

Ike Briskin, the jobber who disappeared last year and who was located after a search of many months in California, surprised the trade by turning up in Chicago again early this week.

Florence Conthone has leased the corner store in the new Woods Theatre building, northwest corner of Dearborn and Randolph streets. The rental is $6,000 a year.

Ed. Wodiska, head of the Havana Production Co., is here. He placed his Lord Byron brand with the W. H. Monroe Cigar Co. who will carry it in a variety of sizes.

Basil Condax, who has been at the New York office of E. A. Condax & Co., is expected at the Chicago office again in a few days.

Walter Tobin & Co. have registered the little Lipton Cup. They will have this brand made as a clear Havana brand and will push it with their trade.

Alex. Thorsen of Anderson-Thorsen Co., has returned from a business trip.

Eger & Co. have taken on the El Toral brand of clear Havana cigars made by L. Sanchez & Co. of Tampa.

Many Koehne Co. have settled the strike of their cigar makers and everybody is back at work again. While this factory is only one month old it is already working a force of fifty cigarmakers. H. L. H.

TOBACCO PRICES RAISED IN ITALY.

David F. Wilbur, American Consul General at Genoa, reports that a new Italian decree provides that to meet the extraordinary needs of the treasury during the state of war, and for six months after the conclusion of peace, the prices of all varieties of smoking and national tobaccos are modified in accordance with a list which is annexed to the decree. The right, however, is given to the minister of finance to reestablish, at any moment within the given period, the tariff set by a decree of August 23, 1917. The modification consists of an increase of 25 to 30 per cent in the prices of cigars, cigarettes, and smoking tobacco.

TOBACCO CULTURE IN SWITZERLAND.

H. W. Haskell, American Consul at Geneva, says: "Switzerland produces a small quantity of tobacco, but the authorities have raised the question of suppressing its cultivation at this time on account of the great demand for the more necessary products that could be raised.

"The planters of Broye, the center of the industry, have protested against this measure, even if the Government gives them indemnity for the suppression of the planting of tobacco.

"The little village of Montbrellon, near Broye, raised last year $12,000 worth of tobacco. The price obtained for this tobacco was from $27 to $30.50 per 100 pounds, as compared with the former price of $6.50 to $7 per 100 pounds.

"The Canton of Vaud produces most of the tobacco grown in Switzerland, the average crop in this Canton for a period of five years being 528,000 pounds, sold at an average price of about 7 cents per pound. The average crop in the Cantons of Berne and Fribourg, the only other Cantons producing any tobacco, was 102,000 pounds."

APPEAL POWER TO PREVENT STRIKES?

The proposed National War Labor Board with power to "bring about a settlement, by mediation and conciliation, of every controversy arising between employers and workers in the field of production necessary for the effective conduct of the war" should achieve excellent results provided its power is actually to bring about and not merely to urge such settlement.

The trouble has been that, despite all the loyal assurances of those entitled to speak for organized labor as a whole, local unions or leaders of special brotherhoods—as in the recent case of the shipyard carpenters—have found it perfectly easy to persist in strikes or threats to strike, on the plea that their particular cases must be considered as too peculiar and important to be bound by the patriotic pledges offered in the name of

The suggested program of Government mediation, it may be noted, leaves the open or closed shop question in statu quo:

> "In establishments where the union shop exists the same shall continue and the union standards as to wages, hours of labor and other conditions of employment shall be maintained.
> "In establishments where union and non-union men and women now work together, and the employer meets only with employees or representatives engaged in said establishment, the continuance of such conditions shall not be deemed a grievance."

The closed shop has long been the thing for which organized labor has fought hardest. Since the beginning of the war there have been instances in war industries where unions have been only too ready to use the national crisis as a powerful reinforcement in pressing the closed shop demand.

It may be that where the broader pledges and orders of the American Federation of Labor have failed to exercise restraint, the creation of local boards in industrial centers, with authority derived from a National War Labor Board to deal directly with disputes as they arise, may insure that continuity of war work which is now all important.—Evening World.

A-1 AMERICAN WORK

Wm. Steiner, Sons & Co., Successful for 40 Years, Produce Cigar Labels and Bands Equal to the Best Imported.

Once upon a time, when the efficient Hun wasn't so pre-occupied as at present, he made cigar bands for American manufacturers who wanted them just so and didn't mind paying a little more to have them that way.

Of course, the German lithographers were grandfathers at the game, while the Americans were getting measured for their first pair of trousers; but at that, they shoved over some real nice bands, although sometimes it took quite a while to get them. Then the war increased the delay, and the "Trading with the Enemy Act" made matters worse. However, American cigar manufacturers are not worrying, as practically all of them are familiar with the Special Process Bands of Wm. Steiner, Sons & Co., an American firm, which in fact is one of the oldest cigar label houses in this country. And the Steiner labels are equal to the best imported.

Wm. Steiner, Sons & Co., started their lithographing plant in New York City more than forty years ago. In the cigar label industry they were the pioneers, and for forty years they have been busy working at a process to produce an European quality band with American methods and materials. Between times, they devoted their spare moments to perfecting a banding machine to put them on with. It is a wonderful machine, not much larger than a typewriter, and capable of banding 30,000 cigars a day. It automatically compensates for the change of shape in each cigar, with every band on a line, right-side up. The firm has always been ready to pay for breakage, but as yet no one has sent in a bill.

Wm. Steiner, Sons & Co., are at all times only too willing to arrange for a demonstration of the machine for the benefit of those who have not seen it in operation. If by any chance you have not received one of their 1918 Special Process Calendars you can have one mailed to you by sending a request to Wm. Steiner, Sons & Co., 257-265 West 17th street, New York City.

The spring issue of the New York City telephone directory contains the names of 436,000 telephone subscribers. The company will distribute 731,500 copies of the directory in the City.

The Chicago Retail Cigar Dealers' Association Makes a Showing of Excellent Progress at an Important Meeting.

CHICAGO, March 29.—The Chicago Retail Cigar Dealers' Association held their regular meeting Tuesday evening at their headquarters in room 900, Masonic Temple. William J. Schrader presided. The minutes of the previous meeting were read by Secretary Weber, the financial standing of the association to date was explained. Nineteen new members were reported since the last meeting. L. M. Jones, an organizer of national reputation, who has been engaged by the association, addressed the meeting. A letter was read from R. J. Sidenberg, the president of the Buffalo Association. An interesting address then was delivered by Mr. Johnson, who returned two months ago from London. He told how the British-American Tobacco Co. conducted business in England and China, and how success was due to organization. Garcia Grande cigars were passed to the members present by Charles Winkleman, cigar manager of Manny Blanc & Co, Iwan Reis, of the jobbing firm of Iwan Reis &

CLOSER WAR WORK CO-OPERATION.

Definite steps toward a closer co-operation between State authorities and business men of New York State were taken recently when more than 300 representatives of chambers of commerce, boards of trade and county Home Defense Leagues gathered in Albany to discuss topics relating to the war, with Governor Whitman, Adjutant-General Sherrill, members of his staff and other officials. The object of the meeting was to have the business men familiarize themselves with the State's method of conducting war activities and to obtain their advice and criticism so as to promote greater efficiency in the part the State is playing in the prosecution of the war.

Addressing the delegates, Governor Whitman told them that New York State already has given more than 169,000 men to the military forces of the nation to help win the war. This is 42,000 more than the quota assigned to the State.

"And we stand ready to give as many more and as many more again," declared the Governor amid shouts of enthusiasm.

Adjutant-General Charles H. Sherrill called the meeting to order in the Capitol. E. G. Miner, in charge of the Chamber of Commerce Bureau of the Adjutant-General's office, was made chairman, and Roger W. Allen, trade paper publisher, of New York City, was chosen secretary.

At noon the delegates were entertained at luncheon in the ballroom of the Hotel Ten Eyck by the Albany Chamber of Commerce.

During the meeting it developed that the State authorities are anxious to have each county credited with the number of men who have voluntarily enlisted and thus reduce the number of men to be called in the draft. To further this end a motion was adopted to have each county send a representative official of its enlistment with a special representative from each town of more than 30,000 inhabitants with a complete report to be filed in the Adjutant-General's office within a week. These reports will be forwarded to Washington.

The delegates discussed practical methods for systematizing war charities and plans for the co-operation of local authorities, for the establishment and maintenance of proper armory facilities for the new State Guard which now numbers more than 100 posts and has a personnel of more than 63,000 trained men and boys.

A committee was appointed to prepare plans for an amalgamated association of all chambers of commerce in the State.—Nugent's.

PERPETUATING "APRIL FOOL."

"When and where did the observance of All Fools' Day originate?" the Tampa Times inquires. And the answer is: "Nobody seems to know. Antiquarians have traced it away back until it was lost in the mists of the early ages. The Hindoos of today have the same custom and speak of a 'Huli fool' as we speak of an 'April fool,' and for the same reason. The custom prevails in England, but it is hard to believe it was brought to America by stern Puritans, of whom Macauley said that they hated bear-baiting, not because it gave pain to the bear, but because it gave pleasure to the spectators. No, it didn't come over in the Mayflower, but must have crept in in some insidious way. Possibly it came across the seas with some of those cargoes of merry damsels who were shipped over to become wives to the Virginia planters, in exchange for tobacco."

WHEN THE COWBOY CHANGED HIS MIND.

Three years ago on a July morning I rode out of town at dawn with a young friend of mine. For twenty miles or so our paths lay along the same way. He had been to a dance; I had been to town on business. He had had no sleep at all, but he was very gay and debonair and vigorous. The music still rang in his ears and he hummed snatches of the tunes; and, I have no doubt, his ears still hummed with the scraping of high heeled boots and of light slippers on polished floors; with the pounding of feet when a quadrille was danced. The sun came up over the snow clad mountains to the east like the sound of a golden trumpet blowing notes almost too high and clear and incredibly sweet. In the valley the dark green shadows of dawn gave way to the light green brilliance of day. After a while my friend talked of the war. He defended Germany. He imagined, you see, that, singled handed, Germany was fighting the world. His sense of fair play had been aroused. There was no use arguing with him. . . . Two weeks ago I saw my friend in Washington. He was in the uniform of a United States engineer. He was very erect and determined and proud, although he was still unshakably gay and deboniar. And he knew just why he was there and why he hoped in a short time "to get to France." His sense of fair play, you see, had not deserted him; it had merely shifted to the other side.

I was particularly interested in finding out what he thought of saluting; what he thought of this business of "officers and men." He explained his position accurately and with a touch of mysticism; mysticism that had to do with the symbolical relationship of a uniform to the flag and of the flag to the nation itself—the one hundred millions of it; a form of mysticism that all but biologists and Bolsheviki and fools know is the one thing that distinguishes a man from a beast. And this was the boy who had once told me he'd "take orders from no damn man in the world!"—Scribner's Magazine.

Speaking of bargains, it will be well for retailers to have in mind that the salesman who offers them some well-known article at a cut price is only waiting his chance to retrieve himself.

The Western Association of Retail Cigar Dealers is now entering upon the seventh year of its existence. It is one of the oldest organizations of retail cigar dealers in the country and is the pioneer in the field which now comprises organizations in every city of importance in the United States. It boasts of having sponsored the first Anti-Coupon bill that was ever enacted into law, and after having had the law passed it fought its way through the various State and Federal courts until finally the constitutionality of it was established by a decision of the United States Supreme Court.—Dan. Wisconsin Notes

EDGERTON, Wis., March 29.—The growers are still rushing the tobacco crop to receiving points and the unusually fine condition of the country roads has greatly facilitated the movement. The deliveries at Stoughton on Tuesday when five outside buyers were receiving were the largest ever seen in that market, between two and three hundred teams being crowded about the station during the busy part of the day. Buyers are bending every effort to take in their purchases as fast as possible and even considerable tobacco is being weighed up and paid for in the sheds in order to satisfy growers anxious for their returns on their crops. The unsold crops as well as the few rejected ones are all the time being picked up by buyers who stand ready to take over everything salable at top figures, equal to those paid earlier in the season. It looks as if the country districts will be swept bare of all leaf before another crop is started.

Frosty nights have so far prevented anything being done towards preparing seed beds for a new crop.

Some tobacco is being sent out of storage through small lot shipments consigned to central points and then reconsigned to eastern factories.

J. A. Jenson returned from Dayton, Ohio, for a few days' stay during the week, returning again Wednesday to receive the balance of his purchases in that State. The tobacco will be shipped to Edgerton for warehouse handling of the packing, several carloads having already arrived.

One hundred tons of fertilizer have been ordered by Geo. E. Gary from the Edgerton sheep feeding yards for his farm near Madison.

The Gazette says that Charles Davis, residing four miles north of Janesville, raised the banner crop in this county. He had four acres, which he sold to G. H. Rumrill for thirty cents per pound. This is the highest price paid there and Mr. Davis thinks it is as high as any farmer has received anywhere. The tobacco was harvested on the second of last August and was all in before the frosts.

ST. PAUL POINTERS

Harris-Schwarz Co., N. Y., have taken on many new accounts since Jan. 1 on their various brands. Nearly all the large St. Paul dealers now carry some brand from them.

Serene mixture is hitting in the 300 class. "It sure is a big seller here."

Everybody has heard of J. C. Dunnet. Jack is cigar manager of the big wholesale drug house of Noyes Bros. & Cutler. Their cigar business is tremendous and they control for distribution in their territory the following brands: El Dallo, Knowledge, El Radio, Dan Sully, Nestor, George the Fourth, Mozart, Garcia Grande, Lovera, and Flor de Gonzalez & Sanchez. They work four strictly cigar salesmen and the thirty-eight drug salesmen all carry cigars. It is a common thing for Manager Dunnett to place an order for a half million 10-cent and 2 for 25 cent cigars of one brand, and they have already received a solid carload of one of their big sellers. At present they are having trouble getting enough goods to fill their orders. With each 1,000 cigars they give the dealer a cigar certificate and when he turns in five of these certificates he is entitled to $5 in cash.

DEMUTH & CO. ADVISE THE TRADE.

The scarcity of material, the difficulty of securing goods, and the high cost of labor have forced Wm. Demuth & Co. to advance the prices on their products, and as a result the firm has sent to the trade the following letter:

"The rapid advance in the cost of labor and all raw materials used in the manufacture of our products, resulting from conditions which you well understand, have made a readjustment of prices absolutely imperative.

"In making this announcement we ask, for our mutual interest and protection, that you suggest to your customers the advisability of immediately remarking their stocks to conform to replacement values.

"All French Briar pipes now being sold to the consumer at 50c should hereafter bring 60c, with the exception of certain young men's sizes which may still be profitably sold at 50c.

"Our large assortment of domestic wood pipes permits us to offer you a wide range of styles which can still be retailed profitably at 25c and 35c.

"Our prices change on March 25 and all former prices will be withdrawn on that date. However, all orders postmarked before March 25, will be accepted at present prices.

"We will appreciate your cooperation in this matter and will forward at once upon request new prices on all numbers in which you are interested."

The Northern California Hotel Association will hold its annual dinner, dance and entertainment at the Fairmount Hotel, in San Francisco on April 24.

OVER THE TOP

ROI-TAN goes "over the top" of the case faster than any other brand. Year after year ROI-TAN holds the world's championship for quality and popularity.

Live dealers feature ROI-TAN because it spells big volume and quick turnover. From the standpoint of both dealer and smoker ROI-TAN "THE PERFECT CIGAR" is the one best bet—now, tomorrow, always.

San Francisco Makes Satisfactory Reports

Trade Is Good Enough to Attract Burglars to Cigar Stores

San Francisco, March 27.—Business continues good among the retailers of this city and the distributors all report that business throughout the State is entirely satisfactory. One of the reasons for this is that the past month the weather has been ideal from the farmers' viewpoint. Rain has fallen exactly as needed and in quantities to insure bumper crops, with anything like a normal season during the growing period. This has made the entire interior of the State rejoice, and the cigar and tobacco dealers have shown their confidence with generous orders. The advancing prices have not dampened the enthusiasm of the interior dealers, as they know that with the farmers making money there will be plenty of trade for them.

The fact that business is good among the cigar dealers seems to have reached the knowledge of the underworld, for two bandits stole an automobile on the night of the 26th inst. and then decided that they could make a better haul by holding up a cigar store than any one else. Forthwith they drove to the cigar store of Julius Levy, 644 Laguna Street, and held up Levy and four patrons. The booty was $52. The robbers escaped.

Ehrman Bros. & Co. report that the freight situation is showing an improvement. They have recently received a big shipment of Roi Tans and have about caught up with their back orders. They also remark that collections are excellent. Mr. Ehrman, who has been in the East for some time, is expected back the latter part of this week.

Another handsome cigar store is soon to be opened in this city by Healy & Donaldson, who operate several stores in San Francisco. The new store will be in the Southern Pacific building, at the foot of Market Street, where nearly a hundred thousand people pass daily on the way to and from the ferry to Oakland. They will feature the Isabela Manila cigar in the new store.

Ehrman Bros. & Co., who are distributors of Isabela cigars, say that the brand is going wonderfully well in this city. Besides Healy & Donaldson, this brand is featured by the Terminal Hotel cigar stand, by E. A. Goodwin and by Bouquet Cohn. A number of other stands are selling the Isabela on what might be called a "co-feature" basis.

H. Vreeland, of Benson & Hodges, is in the city visiting the trade and reports that he finds business well up to his expectations.

Charles H. Knubel, "Charles the Great," has returned to the Coast after a long stay in the East. At present he is visiting his Chowchilla ranch, but will come to San Francisco soon for a more protracted stay than he has made for months.

Tuxedo tobacco is now listed at $17.28 wholesale and has been advanced from 13 cents to 15 retail. Bull Durham is now listed at $6.96 and sells at 6 cents retail.

Robert Starr, representative of the John Boltz Segar Co., Philadelphia, distributing the El Palencia through Paganini-Brecca Co., of this city, reports excellent results in his line. He is just bringing out the Elagantes to sell at three for a half.

Robert Donahue, president of the Retail Cigar Dealers' Association, has been appointed captain of the team who will visit the cigar dealers of the city in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan.

Frankel, Gerdts & Co. report that business is proceeding smoothly with them. They are now putting out El Carmine Londres to sell at 10 cents straight. Their reputation for excellent goods is making the cigar a go from the start.

Fred Murphy, of the Murphy Cigar Co., Pocatello, Ida., and distributor for the General Cigar Co., in his territory, is paying the city a short visit before returning to his home in Idaho. Mr. Murphy was taken ill in Portland a couple of months ago and spent several weeks in the hospital in the northern city. He has entirely recovered.

H. L. Judell is jubilant over the success his firm is making with the Fighting Bob cigar. He recently placed 250,000 of these cigars with J. J. Gans at Los Angeles, who is acting as jobber for the Fighting Bob in that territory. Mr. Judell finds it hard to get enough of these cigars to keep up with his orders, but a shipment of 42 cases on the steamer Equador this week will keep him in stock a few minutes. P. E. Foster has been appointed agent for the Fighting Bob by Judell. He will handle the cigar in Roseburg, Ore.

C. Webster McCormack, who recently spent a day or two in this city and then went to Los Angeles, is expected back the end of this week. He will put in a month with the Judell salesmen, traveling over the State and pushing the Webster cigar.

Harry Sklute, of the Judell organization, is now at Cabp Fremont helping establish the Post Exchange stores. He is very proud of the fact that he has placed all his lines in every Post Exchange store at the Camp.

F. V. Welch, manager of the Los Angeles business of M. A. Gunst Branch, spent a couple of days visiting the headquarters of the company. He reports that the South is taking kindly to the White Owl and other brands of the Gunst Co.

AMERICANS CATCH THE MOST FISH.

The total value of the United States fish catch, including Alaska and the Insular possessions, is probably $150,000,000 a year now, though the latest official figures put the total at $125,000,000. The fact, however, that a portion of these figures represents the output prior to the advance in prices resulting from the war, seems to justify an estimate of approximately $150,000,000 as the value of our own output at the present time. This total of $150,000,000 compares with $40,000,000 as the value of the fish catch of Canada, Great Britain, $52,000,000; France, $33,000,000; Russia (in 1911), $50,000,000; Germany, $12,000,000; the Scandinavian States, $25,000,000; Japan, $50,000,000.

In Europe as a whole the recorded fish catch in the latest available year is $225,000,000, for North America (United States, Canada and Newfoundland), $175,000,000, and Japan, $50,000,000, making the total for the countries supplying official figures, $450,000,000. For the remainder of the world, Asia, Africa, South and Central America, Australia and the islands of the Pacific, there are only estimates, but these estimates bring the total of the world's fish takings at the place where taken from the seas above $600,000,000, suggesting that the sums paid by consumers probably exceed a billion dollars per annum. The world's oyster crop, according to report amounts to approximately $25,000,000 a year in value, of which four-fifths are grown in the water of the United States, most of them along the Atlantic frontage, the remainder chiefly in the waters of France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Great Britain.

Fish form a factor of considerable importance in the foreign trade of the United States; the total exported in 1917 amounted to $25,000,000, and the imports about $23,000,000. If we include the amount sent from continental United States to its non-contiguous territories, fish and fish products passed through the ports of the United States in the calendar year 1917 would amount to approximately $50,000,000. This trade in fish and fish products is steadily increasing, the imports having grown from $12,000,000 in 1907 to $23,000,000 in 1917.

The capital invested in the fisheries of the United States, including vessels and establishments on land in which the fish are handled, is, according to the latest official figures, about $75,000,000, the number of persons employed 220,000, and the value of the sea products turned out by the canneries of the country $50,000,000, of which salmon alone amounts to about $25,000,000, and sardines approximately $7,000,000, the United States out-turn of canned sardines being greater in quantity than that of any other country of the world.

CHICAGO RETAILERS MEET.

Co., took the floor and spoke at length on how to get members. Sol M. Bernstein followed him and voiced suggestions how the association could be of help to the dealer. M. B. Siegel was the next speaker, and Charles Winkleman followed on the subject of competition and the question of dues. A motion was made by Mr. Siegel to hold an election for permanent officers at a meeting to be held 30 days from date. The motion was seconded and carried. Mr. Pine spoke on the manufacturing end and the benefits manufacturers would derive from the association. Several committees were then appointed to canvass certain sections of the town for new members. L. M. Jones and H. L. Harris were appointed to take care of the loop dealers. The meeting then adjourned. The next meeting of the association for regular business will be held Tuesday, April 9.

TOBACCO BOUGHT FOR BRITISH TROOPS.

Macpherson, Under-Secretary for War, in a recent statement to the British House of Commons, said: "The House would be interested to hear that the value of purchases made by the war department during the year 1917 amounted, approximately, to a total of £270,000,000 of manufactured goods, including £26,000,000 for the Allies and £113,000,000 for raw materials. Under the heading of tobacco—now rightly regarded as part of the soldier's ration—(hear, hear)—8,500,000 lbs. of pipe and chewing tobacco and 11,000,000 lbs. of cigarettes were purchased. The cigarette was now, as the House knew, the soldiers' favorite form of smoke."

Z. J. Eppstein, who has charge of the Schinasi sales on the Coast, has just returned from a four-weeks' trip to Salt Lake, Denver, El Paso, and Los Angeles in the interest of the new packing of Naturals in 16s to sell at twenty-five cents.

The John Bollman Co. Banch of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., states that in addition to the present 10-cent packing of Chesterfield cigarettes, they are now in position to accept orders for Chesterfield cigarettes in 20s to retail at 13 cents a package, two for 25 cents. The 20s packing will be packed in one dozen cartons and billed at $14.76 per gross packages.

E. H. Judell & Co. have taken over the distribution of the Vogan's Chocolate Drops to the cigar trade.

The cigar firm of Halpern & Sweet, at Sacramento, has been dissolved and the business will be continued by Morris Halpern.

S. Wardner & Co., makers of "83" cigars have acquired new quarters at 55 North Main street, Concord, N. H. In recent years the "83" brand has grown to be so popular that the proprietors of the company, P. H. Cahill and John F. Stohrer, appropriately may show their prosperity by moving to a more desirable location. New fixtures have been installed and the Concord Patriot declares the store to be "second to none in New England."

The man who acquired a thirst for thrift stamps and bought one every time he felt like taking a drink has failed to show up at the Flatiron store since he read about himself in the papers. Tuesday an Italian entered the store and wanted to know where he could have a pair of pants mended. Another man who had just become the father of a little girl bought five stamps for the baby. It represented all the money he had left in the world.

James Stillman, chairman of the Board of the National City Bank of New York, for many years, was regarded as one of the ablest financiers in America. He was a man exceedingly careful, shrewd and far-sighted. During his long life, business opponents ever admitted that his judgment was good. And when the great banker passed away he left more than an immense fortune to his heirs. Yet, the editor of Forbes Magazine, B. G. Forbes, describes Banker Stillman as a constant smoker of cigarettes.

"A workmen's health insurance law is sure to come just as workmen's compensation came. Organized labor in New York has unanimously endorsed it. We will keep on fighting for it until we get it." With this declaration, President James P. Holland of the New York State Federation of Labor threw down the challenge of the workers to opponents of the Nicoll health insurance bill, at a hearing on the measure before the Senate Judiciary Committee of the New York Legislature.

Burlington, Iowa, has a new business firm. The Union Cigar Store, J. S. Stine and A. Cousineau proprietors, has opened up for business at 115 Jefferson street, opposite The Hawk-Eye, at Herman Holstein's old stand, and is already enjoying a generous patronage. Messrs. Stine and Cousineau are practical cigar men of many years' experience. They have an extended acquaintance and both are popular and there is every reason to expect that their venture will prove a successful one.

Application for dissolution of their partnership, accounting and for appointment of a receiver for the tobacco and corn crop on the Barbara Schroeder farm in Miami township, was filed Monday in comon pleas court at Dayton, O., by John A. Schroeder against Frederick W. Schroeder of Miamisburg. In his petition, John A. Schroeder alleges the partnership is indebted to him in the sum of $230.18 for horses purchased for work in the handling of the crops. He charges the defendant has failed in performance of his part of their partnership contract.

Although the United States has begun to import a much larger volume of Chinese tobacco from Hongkong for special mixing purposes, Hongkong's import of American tobacco is one of the most important items in the American export list. Imports of American leaf tobacco into Hongkong at the present time amount to about 6,000 tierces and hogsheads annually, valued roughly at $1,500,000, and representing an increase of about 10 per cent over the imports of last year. This tobacco is imported almost altogether for the use of a cigarette factory in Hongkong, although a small portion of the trade is with Chinese dealers in Hongkong and in South China ports for mixing with the native product.

UP STATE DISCOVERIES

"An' they ain't male-men's faces, either. Fer M. J. Canaday is findin' it hard work to git smart boys lik' Henry Hotaling an' Sim to help out. So he's hirin' suffragists to push th' Pinzons 'til th' Krazy-Kaiser gits his mighty mustachios sawed off by som' uv th' boys Myron has sent Over There f'om th' Albany hotel cigar sector."

"Talking of soldiers," broke in Jim Stubb, "I understand Frank Shields, Jr., has had a hard time of it. He went away to a Southern training camp a long while ago. And, during the Winter he contracted a cold, developing quickly into pneumonia.

"When it was feared by the major-medico that the boy could not be expected to survive, the army folk sent for his father, the senior Church street tobacco manufacturer.

"After several weeks of a strenuous fight, however, young Shields is convalescing. So he is returning to Albany with his parents, having necessarily obtained a disability discharge from further service."

"Mrs. A. N. Brady has been very sick, too," continued Jim, "She had an attack of La Grippe, which suddenly affected the heart. So the entire family of the late American Tobacco Co. director has been wired for, and they are coming to Albany as quickly as possible."

"Say, Mr. Stubb," spoke up Benny, as he winded th' infernal machine inside th' Webster cigar-cutter, "Here's a card a feller named A. S. Gross left wit' me to give ya."

"Who's he, Benny?" asked Jim Stubb, turnin' th' card over ter see if there were any secret service marks on it.

"Said he'd been 'round before ter see yer, Mr. Stubb," informed Benny, "but that yer allus out. So he jest said he like ter make a bid on yer private monergram cigarette trade. He travels fer Blakesley & Co., in New York, an' they make brands fer individuals an' organizashuns. Told me he sold som' ter Steward Miller, who looks after cigars an' t'ings upter th' Albany Fort- Orange Club."

"Dese clubs an' odder soshallities are havin' tough pickin', Mr. Stubb," Benny confidentially announced, "I knows 'cause I has a-coupla fren's workin' in two differunt places, an' they both say th' cigar an' cigarette biziness is fallin' off som'thin' terribul.

"Most uv th' members, especially uv th' younger fellers, are in either th' army or th' navee, so th' remainin' few are th' older chaps who don't spend th' dough lik' th' boys in th' serviss.

"There's som' talk 'bout 'malgamatin' th' three or four weakest clubs inter a big affair lik' th' Yale-Princeton combinashun in New York. This 'ud be better fer all hands, includin' th' cigar cases."

"I see, Mr. Stubb," went on Benny, while he polished th' ferrules in th' Italia Bruyere C. P. F. case, "that th' J. W. Stevens store, down on th' corner of Broadway and State, is now carryin' a nice line of dese W. D. C. Lucerne pipes. Manager Shaxby bought a complete 'sortment, an' dey look swell, sure 'nuf."

"See that waiter who jess went inter th' Rotisserie?" axed Benny, indicatin' a Greek balancin' a tray o'remains o'er his head. "Well, that guy came in 'ere yisterday, askin' fer a big cigar-box. So I gives 'im a empty 250-box o'Havana Smokers.

"In a lil' while I goes out meself an' waits fer a West Albany car over there on th' corner. Soon out comes th' Greek, wit' me cigar box all wrapped up in paper, an' he waits fer my car.

"When we gits aboard, th' trolley is crowded, an' me an' th' grease-spot hev to sit side by each down where th' 'ductor pinches his share o'company revenue.

"Ev'rything goes alright 'til we reaches th' top o' th' hill, an' th' bell-pull hollers th' street, 'Eagle!' Then th' Man-uv-Athens 'longside o'me looks at th' nickel grabber, shakes his head, an' mutters som'thin' which sounded lik' 'aquila-non'.

"So I gits to notin' that th' gink keeps on gibberin' an' gittin' mor' an' mor' excited as th' boy in blue-an'-gold proceeds ter qualify on th' passin' bird named streets o'Albany as they flit by in th' flock of Hawk, Swan, Dove, Lark, Robin, Quail, Partridge—

"Right here 'twas th' dark-un wit' my smoker-box jumped up all tremblin' an' peevish kinda, shoutin' ter th' transfer-clerk:

" 'You-a 'tink you-a smart, try guess what-a I gotta in box! Butta you-a canna do! Eet is-a non eagle, non hawk-a, swan-a, non sparra, canara! Nono, non! But-a, eef you-a wanna know—hees-a chicken'!"

"Mebbe th' Greek didn't swipe it—I don't know. But he got off that car at Partridge street, wit' my old smoker-box tucked tightly under his own left wing, shakin' his bean over th' bird guessin' game!"

"Speakin' of th' Rotisserie," went on Benny, whilst he massaged th' plate-glass cigar case tops wit' a Good Friday chamois, "me old fren' Draudt came in th' other day, askin' fer a good place ter eat. So I sent 'im inter th' Rotisserie.

"Yer see, Draudt, lik' all th' other boys in Boss Riggio's division, hustle 'round th' Capitol District as tho th' Red One himself was sellin' goods on th' vera nex' block. An', in order to beat 'im, Draudt an' his crew rush aroun' somethin' awful!

"Why, Draudt is gittin' so thin he's a mere shadder. He an' Riggio jumped thru this sector some days ago lookin' fer a place where Lucky Strike cigarettes wasn't on sale. They couldn't find such a dugout.

"Then, jess ter be fren'ly 'bout callin' so

GARCIA GRANDE'S undeniable mildness is associated with the distinctive quality of Vuelta Abajo tobacco.

When we originated the Garcia Grande, we gave the world a real mild Havana, a large cigar, a good cigar that could be sold for a moderate price. The Garcia Grande represents the triumph of a new idea.

The Garcia Grande has attained a national distribution, not through extensive advertising, but strictly on its merits. It has developed continually increasing sales in all parts of the country. The fact that it appeals to everyone who likes a mild Havana, makes the Garcia Grande a brand that both the jobber and retailer may depend on for steady business.

hurriedly, Riggio buys cigars in each an' every shanty they enter. Result, Draudt has his ulster full. An' he dassent smoke cigars in public, either, else th' hull bloomin' trade will think Lucky Strikes ain't toasted anny mor', fearin' th' A. T. Co. is servin' 'em raw!

"Now, this a-course, won't do a-tall. So Draudt uses th' cigars fer tips to waiters. An' that's why I sent 'im inter th' Rotisserie—th' waiters there all smoke cigarets, either Lucky Strikes or Meccas— an' they come in here an' exchange Draudt's good cigars for th' necessary cigarettes at a favorable rate o' discount, accordin' ter th' prevailin' exchange at Stubb & Ash's wholesale an' retail emporium!"

"By th' way, Benny," Mr. Ash instructed, "make a memo to order a 'nother case of Lucky Strikes before th' size an' price changes again."

Benny came back from an errand to the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co. with an ounce o'info 'bout these busy Albany jobbers: "Say, Mr. Stubb, didcha know th' Dearstynes are putin' up a bran new Sealskin sign?"

"No, Benny," replied Stubb, clicking the light-switch on his own windows, "no, I hadn't heard it. What sort of a sign is it?"

"Well, Mr. Stubb, yer know th' City Aldermen passed an ordinance som' time ago sayin' ev'ry merchant on th' downtown streets hadter remove projectin' signs. So th' Dearstynes, lik' all th' other progressive dealers, jest took down their big extendin' 'lectric sidewalk 'luminashun."

"An' now, atter mos' uv dem non-glim nights has bin stopped by th' Govern'ment, th' Dearstynes jest thought it'd be a pretty good time ter put up a nice, long 'lectric cigar close ter th' buildin' they occerpy at South Pearl an' Division streets. That's why th' 'lectricians were busy wit' ladders, ropes, an' things las' Saterday, hangin' th' frame fer th' vert'cal Sealskin cigar which now complies wit' all reg'lashuns."

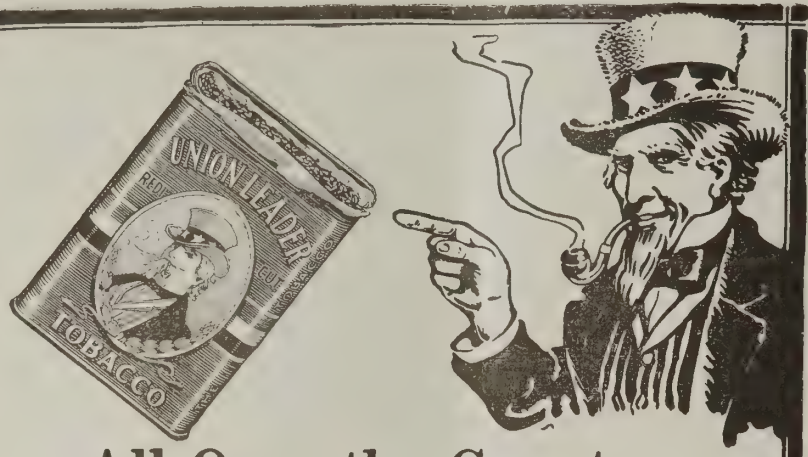
"Nudder 'ting, Mr. Stubb," exclaimed Benny, as he set George Haswell's $65 chair in the middle of the circle for the evening session of the Hot Chair Club, "I see down on Pearl Street that there's a fight on wit' th' druggists 'bout ten-cent straight see-gars."

"All th' biggest drug fellers are now in th' scrap, jest ter see who can stand th' cuttin' on Peter Schuyler an' Anndora cigars 'till th' smokers git their humidors full. Branche, Warner, Bradt, Liggett, an' mos' uv th' smaller fellies are sellin' these an' odder pop'lar brands three-for-a-quarter, $4 th' box uv fifty."

"Over in Schenectady," began Jim Stubb, stopping to drop a cent in the extended hat of the season's first organ grinder, "I understand Louie Killeen is about to lose a valuable man."

"It is A. H. Birdsall, office manager and buyer for the Killeen jobbing house these last dozen years. Birdsall is leaving Mr. Killeen to enter the motor-car business. He will probably locate in Amsterdam, and he will have the agency for some excellent cars. But Killeen, nevertheless, is sorry to have Birdsall go, as he has been associated with the firm so long that it will be rather difficult to find a substitute for him."

"Another change I notice soon to transpire in the Capitol District," commented Mr. Stubb, as he looked out the door to see why the hurdy-gurdy wasn't playing one more tune for that contributed cent, "is the retirement of Phineas Magnus from active business."



"For years and years, Magnus has been in the cigar trade. Originally with the Union News Co., he left their employ to open his present store at Hamilton and Dove streets, Albany."

"But his not too robust health has necessitated the sale of the entire stock and fixtures, including good-will, to B. F. Phillips, who will take possession 'roundabout May first."

"Mentioning the Union News Co.," recalled Mr. Stubb, as he returned from the door to wait upon a man who wanted a pound of Lowney's, makes me think of the way they sidetracked cigars at the smoking room display.

THE SMOKER.

Supreme faith in the genius of our commercial public to use good common sense in the contemplation of after-the-war trade was expressed Friday evening by Burwell S. Cutler, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in an address to representative New England exporters at Boston. "You can not make me believe," he stated, "that the sturdy figures who have in the last 50 years won a place for us as one of the three or four greatest world powers will ever be stamped into fear or uncertainty on account of what competition will do. When reconstruction is actually at hand the American business man will find perfectly normal ways of holding his own in every market of the world, without recourse to any selfish national schemes designed to hoodwink our commercial brethren abroad. Indeed it may be assumed that our trouble will be one chiefly of satisfying the tremendous demand for our goods both at home and abroad."

LOCAL OPTION CONTESTS

Thirty-nine Cities in New York State Soon to Vote on the Saloon Question—And Women May Cast the Deciding Ballots.

The voters of thirty-nine cities in New York State will determine on April 16, whether the saloon or any other form of liquor selling is to be tolerated in their communities. This special local option election authorized by the Hill-Wheeler law will be without doubt the liveliest and most interesting use of the ballot for a special and specific purpose that ever will have occurred in the history of New York.

For the first time women will have a say. And the position taken by the women has frightened the supporters of license, and in practically every one of the thirty-nine cities where voting will be done the liquor interests have squirmed and struggled to nullify the woman strength so potentially revealed.

Because women traditionally are supporters of all great moral issues, it is assumed widely that they will cast their ballots for no license in heavy majority; but that assumption is weakened here and there, as in Rome, Schenectady, Syracuse and other manufacturing cities by the known attitude of many women who seem to think that men folk are none the worse off for a glass or two of beer daily.

While he is a canny prophet who can foretell in all instances what the result will be, the present indications are that, at least eighteen of thirty-two cities from which reports have been received will vote dry and that fourteen cities of the thirty-two reported on lean toward the wets, though very slightly in some cases. As matters stand the following cities seem fairly certain to abolish the saloon:

Auburn, Batavia, Beacon, Canandaigua, Corning, Ithaca, Jamestown, Johnstown, Gloversville, New Rochelle, Mount Vernon, Ogdensburg, Oneonta, Fulton, Plattsburg, Port Jervis, Rome and Salamanca.

The following cities display a close contest, favorable in many cases to the wets: Elmira, Glens Falls, Geneva, Lockport, Middletown, Newburgh, Norwich, Oneida, Oswego, Schenectady, Syracuse, Tonawanda, North Tonawanda and Watertown.

Very close contests are indicated in Batavia, New Rochelle, Mount Vernon, Ogdensburg, Port Jervis, Rome and Salamanca, with the drys having the better chance, and in Elmira, Glens Falls, Geneva, Newburgh and Syracuse, with the wets seeming to lead.

Hunter little cigars now come in packets of ten to retail for seven cents. S. Monday & Sons, the manufacturers, have discontinued the practice of putting Hunter little cigars on the market in packets of eight.

The jobbing trade will be in a better state of mind than they are right now, if packings and prices settle down to something reliable once more. "We never knew what a snap we had," remarked a Minneapolis jobber, "when we quoted prices at 48 and 96 cents a dozen.

Gus Kafka, proprietor of the cigar store in the Metropolitan building, St. Paul, and chairman of the price committee of the St. Paul Cigar and Tobacco Merchants' Association, has certainly been fulfilling all the duty requirements of a loyal American citizen. During the day he has left his business in the hands of his assistants while he served on the jury, and during the evening was to be found at the Ozmun Temple Unit of the Red Cross. When a "jazz" band was furnished music for the Ozmun Temple workers, he demonstrated his superior ability in this line of work, by dancing to the music and rolling bandages at the same time, to the huge delight of those present.—Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

SOMETIMES.

Sometimes, when th' way seems weary,
Sometimes when th' world seems blue;
Sometimes when yer outlook's dreary,
And there don't seem nothing new—

Sometimes when yer pleasures bore you,
And there ain't no one that cares;
When yer life lies all before you
Like a narrer flight o' stairs—

Sometimes, when th' sun a-shinin'
Seems ter have a brassy gleam,
An' because there ain't no linin'
Storm clouds are just what they seem-

Sometimes then yer hate just livin',
Hate ter smile an' do yer part;
Sometimes then life seems just givin',
Givin' from an empty heart—

Then's the time ter look fer laughter
In a stranger's vivid eyes;
Then's the time ter follow after
Fairy gold that always lies—

Where th' rainbow seeks the hollow
Off behind th' purple hill;
Where th' winds cry "Follow, follow!"
An' th' day is calm an' still.

Then's th' time ter watch th' gleamin'
Of th' tender stars at night—
Stars that laugh together, seemin',
Just ter show th' world is right!

Then's th' time ter sing, and, singin',
Let some other join yer song;
Then's th' time yer should be bringin'
Smiles where only smiles belong.

Sometimes when th' way seems dreary,
Sometimes when th' world seems sad,
Help somebody worn an' weary,
An' yer life will soon be glad!

"After the War" Plans

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Secretary of Commerce, William C. Redfield, has recently made some very interesting observations relative to "after the war" trade which will bear much thought. He says:

"I have reflected for a long while on what is to be done 'after the war,' and let me say that the more I think of it the less I think of it. I have about come to the conclusion that we ought not to think very much about 'after the war' but confine ourselves to thinking for the present of how to win the war. There are three reasons for this, which are:

"First, if we do not win the war we shall do business after the war under the control of someone besides ourselves.

"Second, we do not know when 'after the war' will be or what will happen before that time, or the conditions which will exist at home or abroad when that time arrives. It is impossible to plan for an unknown quantity.

"Third, if we devote ourselves to winning the war with a mind single to that one great purpose, it seems to me to provide the only certain steps which we can say will surely be useful after the war.

"First, then, if Germany wins she proposes to dominate the seas. Her trade journals definitely stated that freedom of the seas means for her domination of the seas. The Emperor has expressly stated that no high decision will be made on our side of the Atlantic without consulting the German Government and the German Kaiser. If this is to be our fate, which God forbid, our plans will be made by others.

"Second, we do not know what is going to happen before the war ends, and what may happen may be controlling. For example, two years ago it looked as if Russia would be one of the greatest future markets for American goods and many merchants made plans on that basis which now they wish they had not made. No plans made up to a year ago for Russian business are worth anything now, nor are conditions such that any plans can be made for business in that country at any known time in the visible future. If the war lasts long enough to bring Germany to exhaustion, plans which are based upon their active competition will need revision. If England and France are fought to a finish, plans based upon their active competition may need revision. We do not know what the facts will be and how to make plans about unknown effects at an unknown time is more than I can say.

"In the third place, the country needs the united effort of everybody on the one job we have got, namely, the winning of the war. Looked at in a business sense this means for every factory and business concern the avoidance of waste, the cutting down of every useless expense, the making of the largest possible product, the working in harmony with labor, the making of every business, in short, into an economic athlete that it may do its part in the struggle. But this process, well done, is precisely the thing that will fit us for the period 'after the war.' We need not worry as to what will then happen if we are sure that America can face it with a commercial organization made up of trained industrial and economic athletes. That will be the greatest possible act of preparatory things.

"Finally, I do not mean that we should be blind. We ought clearly to do what we can, if we can see it clearly. The Webb Bill ought to pass and be made a law. Anything within our own power to do that will make our commercial and financial organizations more flexible and effective at home and abroad should be done, but further than this, without any desire to speak with finality or to make excathedra utterances, I find myself more and more reluctant to dwell upon the future and more and more forced to deal with the urgent present."

H. Martin Johnson, secretary of the St. Paul Retail Druggists' Association, says he knows of only two druggists in St. Paul who will not abide by the new tobacco price schedule.

Having gained an hour by turning forward the clock, the Tampa Tribune proposes to have more agreeable temperature next winter by shoving up the mercury in the thermometer.

Von Hoffman Herr, principal owner of the Baldwin Hotel, Beach Havens, N. J., and the Galbreath Apartments, Atlantic City, N. J., has filed a petition in bankruptcy, citing assets of $240,000 and liabilities of $186,000.

UNINTIMIDATED

"Riding uptown on a Fifth avenue 'bus," says Bruce Barton in Every Week, "we passed one of the richest and most penurious men in New York." My friend said to me: "Did you ever stop to analyze avarice—to discover what it is that makes men hard and grasping?

"Men are afraid of being hungry; afraid of being cold; afraid of losing their money and having to start all over again.

"In all the world there is nothing more tragic than the withered soul of a man who has a little money, and lies down and gets up in terror lest it should somehow be taken from him."

Then he went on to tell me about his father, who came out of the Civil War penniless and built up a fortune.

"He lost every cent of it in the panic of 1873," he said. "And in ten years he had made it again.

"Then came the awful year of 1892-3. Banks failed. And right in the midst of it, when it was impossible to borrow a dollar anywhere, certain men attempted to force a proposition on my father by which he could have saved his business at the expense of his business honor.

"He called them into his office—I was just old enough to remember it—and there he stood, a man of more than fifty, gray-haired, facing financial ruin.

"'Gentlemen,' he said, 'you have been doing business with me for a good many years; you know I am square and reasonable. And now, when my back is against the wall, you want me to compromise my principles, and threaten to destroy me if I don't.'

"He looked them squarely in the eye

"'I want to tell you a little story' he continued quietly. 'I was just a bo in the Civil War; and after the batt of Chancellorsville I was cold and hur gry, and there was nothing to eat.

"'Walking across the battlefield, found the body of a dead soldier. H was not a pretty sight, but clutched i his hand was half a loaf of moldy brea And I took my ram-rod and fished i out of his hand, and for two days lived on that moldy crust.'

"'You think you can frighten me b threatening to put me out of business' he cried. 'Let me ask you a questio first. Have you ever lived on a dr crust for two days? No? Well, I have and, what's more, I can do it again and if you can't, you'd better not go t war with me.

"'That's all.'"

WORK OF THE TREASURY.

The ordinary actual disbursements of the United States Treasury, which include all war expenses, from the first of July, 1917, to March 16, 1918, when the Treasury statement was issued, amount to $4,233,261,000.

The ordinary actual disbursements for the corresponding period of the fiscal year of 1917 were $683,969,000.

These figures show that the war has added practically three and a half billion to the expenses of the Government for the time between the two dates named, eight and a half months. This means an expenditure for war purposes, for America's part in the war, of about $400,000,000 a month or over $13,000,000 a day.

The above figures, however, do not include the $3,621,830,000 loaned to our Allies in the period dealt with. These are good and secure investments which will ultimately be repaid the United States. The total loans to our Allies to date aggregate practically $5,000,000,000. Nor is the $22,000,000 used to purchase Farm Loan Bonds included, another investment rather than an expense.

The total disbursements of the Treasury from July 1 last to March 16 were $11,274,575,000. This sum includes the ordinary actual disbursements which comprise the usual civil expenses of the Government and the cost of the war as above set out, the amount loaned our Allies, and bonds, notes, and certificates of indebtedness retired. Most of this last item is made up of payments of the short-term interim certificates issued last fall.

The total receipts of the Government in the period named were $11,017,257,000, against total receipts for the corresponding period of the fiscal year 1917 of $540,217,000.

FOR TWO CENTS.

The two-cent piece, for the coinage of which there is now an insistent demand in Congress, has been the most neglected coin in the history of America's metal money, with the single exception of that miserable thing the twenty-cent piece, first aid to petty swindlers in the '70s and '80s. We have had but one issue of two-cent pieces, beginning in the last year of the Civil War and lasting until 1872. They were big bronze fellows, weighing just twice as much as our present cent weighs; almost as much as a quarter weighs. The Government stopped coining them about the time it discontinued issuing the silver half dime and three-cent pieces. The two-cent piece was perhaps too large; the silver coins surely too small, for convenient handling.

The call for a revival of the two-cent piece is based on the rise in price of many articles which hitherto have sold for a cent. All over the country most newspapers that were sold for a penny have risen in value and price to two cents. The newsdealer undoubtedly would welcome a two-cent piece. Thrown on his counter by the flying citizen, it would be twice as easy to pick up as two cents are. The flying citizen, rummaging in his pockets for two cents, would rather find that amount in one coin than in two pieces.—New York Sun.

NEW BAD CHECK LAW?

A bill has been introduced into the Legislature of the State of New York to amend the penal law in relation to obtaining money by fraudulent check, draft or money order. The amendment of the existing laws provides the making it a misdemeanor for any person, with intent to defraud, to make a check, draft or order for the payment of money upon any bank or any other depositary, knowing at the time that he has not sufficient funds in or credit with such bank or depositary for the payment thereof. As against the maker or drawer thereof, the making of such a check, draft, or order, payment of which is refused by the drawee, shall be prima facie evidence of intent to defraud, unless within five days after receiving notice that such draft, check, or order has not been paid by the drawee, the maker or drawer thereof shall have paid to the drawee the amount due thereon, together with interest and protest fee. The penalty fixed is a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for one year or both.

PAYROLL STATISTICS

WASHINGTON, April 1.—The Bureau of Labor Statistics has just completed compiling the figures showing the employment in selected industries for the month of January of this year.

There were 62 cigar manufacturers who replied to inquiries for January of last year as well as this year. In these 62 plants there were 20,363 persons employed in January of last year, increasing in the same month of this year to 21,352 or an increase of 4.9 per cent. The payrolls also increased from $243,832 in January, 1917, to $265,869 in January of this year, or an increase of 9.0 per cent.

Figures were also compiled for December, 1917, and January, 1918. Sixty cigar manufacturers answered for both of these months. In these 60 plants there were 21,181 persons employed in December, 1917, dropping off slightly to 21,044 in January of this year, or a decrease of 0.6 per cent. The payrolls decreased from $273,199 in December to $259,243 in January or a decrease of 5.1 per cent.

The National Food Administration expects to export 1,100,000 tons of food to our allies in Europe during the coming year.

WORLD TRADE CURRENTS

Changes Caused by the War

The effect of the war upon world trade currents is illustrated by a comparison of the present commerce of the United States with that of the period immediately preceding the war. A compilation by the National City Bank of New York, comparing our foreign trade in the seven months ending January, 1918, with that of the seven months ending with January, 1914, shows that our imports from Europe have fallen 50 per cent, while those from other parts of the world increase 150 per cent; also that the percentage of gain in our exports to the non-European world has been actually greater than that in the exports to Europe.

The bank's compilation shows that the total exports from the United States to Europe in the seven months ending with January, 1918, were $2,205,000,000, against $977,000,000 in the corresponding period ending with January, 1914, an increase of 126 per cent; while exports to the non-European world in the seven months ending with January, 1918, were $1,243,000,000 against $545,000,000 in the corresponding period ending with January, 1914, an increase of 128 per cent. Thus the gain in exports, comparing the latest official figures with those of a corresponding period immediately preceding the war, is 126 per cent increase to Europe and 128 per cent increase to the remainder of the world.

All of the non-European world, recognizing the difficulties of the access to Europe, has apparently turned to the United States. Our own imports from Asia have increased from $163,000,000 in the seven months ending with January, 1914, to $462,000,000 in the seven months ending with January, 1918, while the exports to Asia (excluding that for Europe sent by way of Asiatic Russia) have increased from $73,000,000 in the seven months ending with January, 1914, to $229,000,000 in the corresponding period in 1918. From South America the imports for the same respective periods advanced from $119,000,000 to $318,000,000, and the exports to South America increased from $81,000,000 to $199,000,000. From our neighboring countries and islands of North America the imports increased from $230,000,000 to $491,000,000, and the exports to them advanced from $325,000,000 in the 1914 period to $701,000,000 in the 1918 period. From Oceania imports increased from $20,000,000 to $71,000,000, and the exports thereto increased from $48,000,00 to $77,000,000. From Africa the imports increased from $8,000,000 to $38,000,000 and the exports to Africa advanced from $17,000,000 to $36,000,000. From Europe the imports fell from $527,000,000 in the seven months ending with January, 1914, to $255,000,000 in the seven months ending with January, 1918, while the exports to Europe in the same period (including those sent by way of Asiatic Russia) increased from $977,000,000 to $2,205,000,000.

The share which the United States is now handling of the trade of the non-European world is much greater than before the war. Normally, in the pre-war-period, we supplied less than 15 per cent of the imports of South America; in 1917 we supplied about 45 per cent of her imports. In the case of Asia we supplied before the war about 6 per cent of the imports, and in 1917 about 15 per cent. Of the imports of North America, exclusive of the United States, we supplied in 1913 about 60 per cent, and in 1917 over 80 per cent. Of the imports of Europe we supplied before the war about 12 per cent, and in 1917 we supplied about 30 per cent of the imports of that continent, exclusive of the Central Powers.

Most of this great gain in the exports of the United States occurs in manufactures, and most of the gain in imports occurs in manufacturing material. Manufacturers form about 80 per cent of the total exports to the non-European world, while the European demands for manufactures for the battlefield has greatly increased the percentage which manufactures form of the exports to that continent. The total value of manufactures exported in the seven months ending with January, 1918, was $2,133,000,000, against $650,000,000 in 1913.

FREIGHT RATE UPHELD

legally applicable to export shipments from and to the points above named, when stopped in transit at Nashville, should be the through rates from points of origin to destination in effect when the shipments moved to Nashville, plus a stoppage in transit charge at Nashville of 1.5 cents per 100 pounds, provided the through rates applied through Nashville. During the period of the movement to Nashville there were published to New Orleans by way of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis and the Illinois Central joint rates of 25 cents from Paris and Martin and 22 cents from Paducah, and these are the rates which complainant contends were legally applicable to these shipments. This contention is erroneous as it was specifically provided that the rates mentioned would apply "only via Jackson, Tenn., and Illinois Central R. R., or M. & O. R. R. and N. O. & N. E. R. R." Neither these nor any other joint rates were applicable from the points of origin here under consideration to New Orleans over the route of movement.

Complainant directed practically all of his evidence to the question of tariff interpretation and adduced substantially no evidence to show unreasonableness either of defendants' failure to provide joint rates in connection with a storage in transit service over the route of movement, or of the charges collected.

We find that the charges assailed were legally applicable and that they are not shown to have been unreasonable. An order dismissing the complaint will be entered.

ESTABLISHED 1886

Vol. LXV. No. 26. NEW YORK, APRIL 11, 1918. PER ANNUM, $2.00 SIX MONTHS, $1.00

ALL FOR OUR SOLDIERS

Duke's Mixture and Velvet, two brands of smoking tobacco having immense popularity, have been optioned by the government. Of both brands, the entire output is reserved for the use of our soldiers and sailors. Every month, the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. will ship upwards of 750,000 pounds of smoking tobacco to the American forces on the other side.

Velvet and Duke's Mixture now in the hands of the trade, it is said, will be exhausted in 30 days.

NEW YORK LEAF BOARD

Elects Officers and Arranges for the Coming National Convention of Cigar Leaf Tobacco Men.

The annual meeting of the Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade of New York was held Tuesday, April 9, in the rooms of the Board at 136-140 Front street. The trustees elected were: Frank M. Arguimbau, Wm. S. Brill, Jos. F. Cullman, John H. Duys, Howard Friend, Charles Fox, Chas. R. Goldsmith, F. R. Hoisington, Fred Lederer, Joseph Mendelsohn, Benno Rosenwald, Alfred R. Schmid, Sig. Schluechterer, Carl W. Webbe, and Jerome Waller. Then the trustees elected Joseph Mendelsohn, president; Wm. S. Brill, vice-president; Chas. R. Goldsmith, treasurer, and Charles Fox, secretary.

Delegates elected to the National Convention of the Cigar Leaf Association to be held in New York, May 20-21 are: A. Bijur, Fred Block, John H. Duys, Ernest Ellinger, Howard Friend, Julius Lichtenstein, Percival Levy, Fred Lederer, Julius Marqusee, Maximilian Stern, Alfred R. Schmid, and Jerome Waller.

The alternates were: Frank A. Bach, Louis A. Bornemann, Herbert Cohn, Fred J. Frese, John L. Fielding, John H. Goetze, E. L. Kohlberg, Max Maier, Chas. Meismer, S. Rosenbluth, Morris Rosenberg, and Chas. J. Waxelbaum.

The entertainment committee for the coming convention is headed by Alfred Schmid and includes Chas. Meissner and Fred Block. No place has been selected for the convention, but this part of the program will be well attended to by the entertainment committee, which has full authority.

In the past visiting delegates have been entertained on a lavish scale, but this year, owing to the general feeling towards economy, the entertainment phase of the convention will be somewhat modified.

WHEN THE TURKS SURRENDERED JERUSALEM TO THE ALLIES

When great things happen, the actual occurrence usually is less spectacular than is popularly supposed. Witness here a depiction of the surrender of Jerusalem. For centuries the Holy City had been held by the Turks. From a military, as well as from a sentimental point of view, the capture of Jerusalem by the Allies was one of the great events of the war. What occasion could be more historic?

The scene, when Jerusalem was surrendered, is shown in the only photograph taken on the spot, at the time. The Turk, carrying a cigarette in one hand and a cane in the other, is the official who yielded the city to General Allenby. When the Turkish deputation bearing a white flag came out, two British soldiers advanced and were notified that "Jerusalem had surrendered." So the camera recorded history.

J. Alles of Alles & Fisher Becomes Tired of Life—The Biggest Parade Boston Ever Had—80,000 Men in Line to Aid the Third Liberty Loan—Boston Associations Merge in One Organization to Speed Up Bond Purchases—Rosendorf Resigns His Position with the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

BOSTON, April 9.—J. Alles, of the well-known firm of Alles & Fisher, makers of the J. A. Cigars, committed suicide yesterday. Mr. Alles was eighty-one years old, and actively engaged in business until his death. Friends are at a loss to account for his rash act, for his financial affairs were in excellent shape.

Eighty thousand were in line last Saturday in the Liberty Loan Parade. The parade started at one o'clock, and the last division passed the reviewing stand after nine o'clock at night. It was the biggest parade ever held in Boston.

Frank Rosendorf, for the last seventeen years with Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. surprised the trade this week by advising them that he had resigned. The trade regarded Frank as a fixture with the company. Frank says that he has made no definite plans, he doesn't know now just what he will do, but he has a number of proposition that he is considering. Frank Rosendorf has a multitude of friends here who wish him all kinds of success.

James C. Sowden, well-known in tobacco circles, more recently with the Thomas F. Marshall Co. of South Waymouth, resigned this week to accept a responsible government position.

The taking over of the output of Bull Durham and Duke's Mixture, by the government, came as a big surprise. All the jobbers have more or less stock of these two brands on hand, which is rapidly going out. It will be but a short time when the stocks of both retailer and jobber will be entirely sold out.

Phone girl weds salesman at Cathedral. Lynn and Boston friends of Miss Mary P. Walsh, a former telephone operator at the old American House in Boston, and Patrick A. Collins, a cigar salesman of Lynn, were surprised to learn, to-day, of their marriage, which took place last Sunday in the rectory of the Cathedral of the Holy Cross in Boston.

Collins has been employed as a salesman for D. F. Donohue at 12 Market street, Lynn, for 19 years.

Cigar and Tobacco Trade Association of Boston has been merged into one organization. In previous campaigns the cigar manufacturers and retailers and jobbers operated independently. This time there is one committee representing the entire trades, which consists of the following:

Chairman, Richard E. Traiser.
V. Chairman, Charles B. Perkins.

Clarence E. Hunter, president of the Tobacco Trades Association of Boston, acting as Secretary for the Executive Committee.

Entire committee consisting of all the firms in the wholesale cigar and tobacco trade, who are members of the Tobacco Trades Association of New England.

The cigar manufacturers were organized separately under the chairmanship of Richard E. Traiser.

The organization is only for Boston, and consists only of Boston people.

On Monday evening, Chairman Traiser invited the members of the trade to a banquet at the Boston City Club, where the outline of the campaign was given in detail. There were interesting discourses; perhaps the most interesting was that of Major Smite of the British Army, who has been at the front with a Canadian Regiment as Chaplain. He told the guests just what he witnessed with his own eyes in various battles. All members of this committee have made a very good showing to date, and they are on their toes to make a record.

PART OF A SHIPMENT OF BULL DURHAM TO OUR SOLDIERS

The American Tobacco Co. gave the soldiers and sailors the preference, and as a result has turned over the entire output of Bull Durham to the U. S. Government. This means that Bull Durham will be withdrawn from the market and will become scarcer and scarcer as time passes, until a bag of the "makings" will loom up as a relic of the good old days.

The American Tobacco Co. will turn over every month to the Government 36,000,000 sacks or 2,000,000 pounds of granulated tobacco. And so, Mr. Stay-at-Home, if you can't get the makin's, think of the joy that tobacco bring the boys who are fighting on the other side. If the old Bull is a necessity to men in times of peace and prosperity what must it be to our soldiers in France? But the Bull will come back crowned with glory, with service medals on its horns. It has a place all its own in the international scrap for Democracy.

UNCLE SAM'S SHIPPING

Tonnage Crossing the Atlantic Gained 20 Per Cent. During March—About 400 Vessels in Service.

WASHINGTON, April 9.—An increase of 20 per cent in the amount of tonnage shipped across the Atlantic in March was gained through close co-operation of the Ship Control Committee, the Shipping Board and the War Department in directing the movement of traffic. Officials confidently predicted to-day that the efficiency in handling was growing, and would mean a gain of 30 per cent in tonnage during the present month.

The strength of the non-fighting fleet which the United States has contributed to the aid of the Allies became known to-day for the first time. Three hundred and ninety American vessels, or vessels under American control, now are in the transatlantic trade with a tonnage of 2,762,605. Of these 322 fly the American flag, while sixty-eight are chartered ships of neutral nations. The American ships have a carrying capacity of 2,365,-344 tons.

In addition to the present fleet there are 471,000 tons of Dutch ships still to be put into service as soon as crews can be provided. Ships built in America for the Shipping Board will swell the total still further, as the building programme begins to show cumulative results during the summer.

When the Ship Control Committee was established, January 30, to have supreme charge of all ships entering American ports, it was hoped that centralized control would mean the addition of 1,000,000 tons to the shipping facilities available for the transportation of men, munitions and food to fight the Kaiser.

In two months that object has been achieved by having one force to guide the American, Allied and neutral ships trading in American ports.

Delays in loading have been reduced to a minimum by directing ships to ports where cargoes are available. If an American vessel is not ready to take a cargo of goods waiting to be sent to the American forces abroad, any Allied vessel is used to prevent delay and

Doing Their Utmost to Promote Bond Sales

Well Planned Work of Tobacco Trade Representatives Who Are Helping to Make the Third Liberty Loan a Tremendous Success—"Notice of the Second Draft"—Captains Appointed—The Various Teams—Some Surprisingly Good Reports May Be Made

The Liberty Loan Committee for the Tobacco Trade is now enthusiastically engaged in its campaign to assist in every way possible in the sale of third Liberty Loan bonds. While no definite figures are as yet available, assurances are given that the subscriptions already received, are most encouraging.

As previously announced, the entire staff and office facilities of the Tobacco Merchants Association at 5 Beekman street, New York, have been placed at the disposal of the committee, and the T. M. A. office is being utilized as headquarters.

Plans have been made by means of which it is hoped to reach, through an individual canvass, every one connected with the tobacco industry. To better accomplish this, the trade has been divided into its various branches, and these in turn subdivided into territories.

To work out such a plan successfully the committee must have a considerable number of active assistants throughout the trade, and to obtain the needed help, Chairman Wise sent out the following:

NOTICE OF SECOND DRAFT.

Dear Sir:

Not all of us can get into the trenches, but we can all render our country at least some service to help in the prosecution of the war. What we must all do just now is to make a supreme effort towards the success of the present LIBERTY LOAN.

Being firmly convinced that every one connected with the Tobacco Industry stands ready to do his full duty, our Committee has authorized me to draft you into the great army of patriotic American citizens that is now engaged in floating the THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

You are accordingly appointed Captain of Team No. , to make a personal canvass of the trade indicated on the enclosed list to secure their subscriptions to the Loan, and you are authorized to make up your own Committee to assist you in the canvass if you so desire.

In confident anticipation that you will accept this patriotic duty, we are sending you under separate cover a number of subscription blanks, which we know you will use to good advantage.

This Committee is not to receive any money on account of subscriptions. The subscriber has merely to fill in the name of his bank in the application and the subscription will go directly through his bank, where payment, whether cash or deferred, will be received.

Needless to say, it is essential that every subscription be forwarded or reported to our Secretary in order that the Tobacco Industry may receive due credit for same. As soon as the proper record has been made we will send the subscriptions to the banks indicated, and proper acknowledgments will be mailed.

With thanks in advance on behalf of the Committee and myself, I am

Respectfully yours,

CHAIRMAN.

THE EXECUTIVE OF "TOBACCO PRODUCTS."

George L. Storm, has resigned the presidency of The Tobacco Products Corporation but remains with the company as vice-president in charge of the operations. At the time Mr. Storm was elected president of the company, it was understood that his incumbency would be temporary.

Mr. Storm has just completed arrangements for making the 100th street and 120th street factories in New York the most up-to-date cigarette factories in the country as respects sanitary ideas. There will be free medical attendance for all employees and a trained nurse always on duty. A special examination of all employees is a feature, also will be adopted a monthly bonus plan. Intensive development of Tobacco Products? Sure.

The plantations and the tobacco factories at Bahia, which were worked by the Germans and were considered the most important tobacco centre in Brazil, have been bought up by Brazilian capitalists, who are renewing their activities in this direction. These factories were closed after the rupture of relations between Brazil and Germany, owing to the boycott by workmen and the Brazilian public. The resumption of work of these important concerns will permit a large increase in the production and exportation.—Agencia Americana.

"You Millions Safe at Home"

From a Man in Uniform to Those of Us Who Are Not

They say, who have come back from Over There, that at night the troubled earth between the lines is carpeted with pain. They say that Death rides whistling in every wind, and that the very mists are charged with torment. They say that of all things spent and squandered there young human life is held least dear.

It is not the pleasantest prospect for those of us who yet can feel upon our lips the pressure of our mother's goodbye kiss. But, please God, our love of life is not so prized as love of right. In this renaissance of our country's valor, we who will edge the wedge of her assault make calm acceptance of its hazards. For us, the steel swept trench, the stiffening cold—weariness, hardship, worse. For you, for whom we go, you millions safe at home—what for you?

We shall need clothes for our bodies and weapons for our hands. We shall need terribly and without failure supplies and equipment in a stream that is constant and never-ending. From you, who are our resource and reliance, who are the heart and hope of that humanity for which we smite and strive, must come these things.

CITIZEN SOLDIER No. 258 in The Nation's Business.

SPLITTING THE INCOME TAX

"Congress, influenced by intelligent advice from financial sources," says Leslie's Weekly, "is considering various proposals to divide income tax payments into monthly installments." Such an arrangement would be in keeping with the policy that gave impetus to the war finance bill. Anyone who is at all familiar with business methods knows that owners of great incomes do not keep large sums of money in bank subject to check. Profits from business undertakings, no matter how great, are turned back into the business or invested in other industries. Consequently, practically every American who pays a big income tax this year will have to borrow the greater part of it from the banks. If normal conditions existed, these borrowings, tremendous as they are certain to prove, would not put too severe a strain on the financial institutions of the country. But conditions, particularly in the financial world, are far from normal. When the income tax falls due in a few weeks, the banks of the United States will be heavily burdened with Liberty Bond holdings purchased outright for millions of depositors who are taking advantage of the monthly payment plan to buy five and ten times the number of bonds they would if payment in full were necessary. Only Government officials and the bankers themselves realize how tremendous a part the financial institutions have played in making the Liberty Loans overwhelming successes. Congress understands the importance of co-operating in every possible way with the men who are carrying the real financial burdens of the war. For that reason, one or another of the bills offered in the House and Senate is sure to be passed, thereby enabling temporarily embarrassed income tax payers to break up their obligation to the Government into monthly payments mildly penalized by a low rate of interest.

Of the 1,125 men of military age in the British-American Tobacco Company's factory in Bristol, England, in August of 1914, 1,109 have joined the British fighting forces, and between 70 and 80 per cent of the company's office staff have similarly rallied to their country's defense. Women and girls, and men over age or unfitted for military duty, now do the work.

THE "WIN THE WAR" SPIRIT

Washington, April 6.—"See that a win-the-war spirit gets into your business letters," is the slogan of a movement launched by the Department of Commerce to remind business men that the everyday business letter is a most effective instrument for creating confidence in the Government's war policies and for inspiring others with the determination to see the war through at any cost.

"The idea was first brought forward in connection with American business letters to foreign countries," said Secretary Redfield today. "The volume of our foreign business mail is very large. It reaches firms in all but the enemy countries. For the most part it is read by those who are for us, but you may be sure that it reaches many who doubt our success and many who are at heart against us. I am sure that every foreign business man who opens an American letter is quick to detect even the slightest indication of the writer's feelings on the conduct of the war and its outcome.

"It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that the American business letter breathe confidence in every line. If the manufacturer or exporter feels that he has a just grievance against restrictions imposed on his trade, by all means let him go right to headquarters and register as emphatic a complaint as he feels is justified. But he certainly should not carry the matter into his business letters. It is sure to create an entirely erroneous impression in some minds.

"Let the American business man make known to the whole world that he is for this war and that he is going to see it through, regardless of inconvenience, loss of trade, loss of money, or anything else. Every manufacturer ought to be fearless in expressing his sentiments even though he may be writing to a concern whose sympathies he may suspect are not wholly with us. Don't give a foreign concern the idea that you are apologizing for your Government's restrictions or that you are chafing under them. Spread the impression, the absolutely correct impression, that over here we are backing this war unqualifiedly."

Make Your Money Tell How Loyal You Are

Prove by Bond Purchases That Your Patriotism Is Real

As the Literary Digest well says:

"Now is the time to feel the red blood of manhood and womanhood beating hot in our veins with a single compelling purpose, a single mastering love, a spirit of sacrifice, that gives all to America."

What does it mean to you—the President's call to the Nation to fight for its honor, for its rights, and for the rights and freedom of humanity? When he said, "there may be many months of fiery trial and sacrifice ahead of us"—when he said, "to such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything we are and everything we have," how did his words come home to you? Now, after a year, at this serious crisis of the war, do they burn their way to the heart with a meaning more real, with a more imperative challenge?

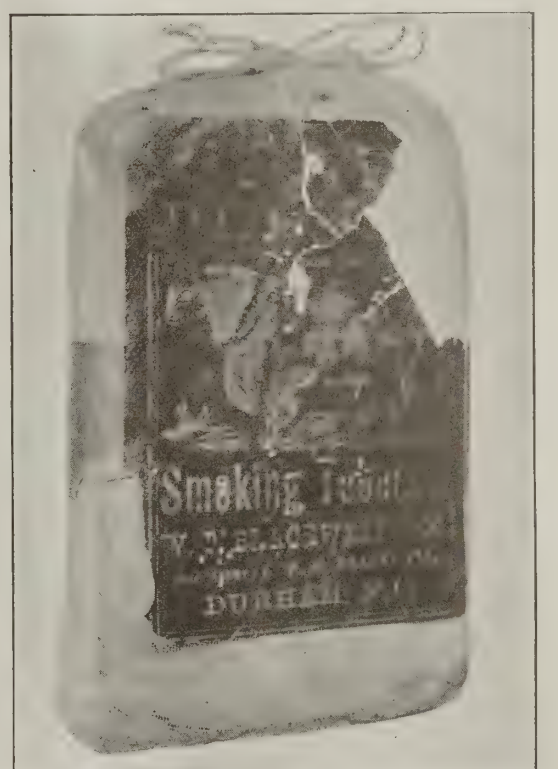
Stern, terrible facts are driving us to action. The fury and cruel cunning of the enemy are unquenched. Russia is under his heel, bedeviled and plundered. Roumania has been crushed and forced to surrender. Fresh hordes of Huns are being hurled against the western fronts. The greatest battle of the war is raging. The lust of conquest and world-dominion is growing, as it feeds itself with first one helpless vicitim and then another. New plots are ready, and new agents of German propaganda are being sent into France, and Britain, and Italy, and America to destroy them from within as Russia was destroyed. We MUST win, or our fate will be as Russia's. We MUST win, or our high professions of service to humanity will be a mockery to the name of America through the ages to come.

America is awakening; its heart is on fire; it has revealed its soul to a world that did not know it before, and now is dazzled by the sight. A deathless purpose to win this war is gripping the American people. The Third Liberty Loan will test this purpose—will give it expression—this month.

Already the young men of America have "dedicated their lives," and have gone to meet their "fiery trial and sacrifice" on the battle-line in France. Hundreds of thousands of our own boys are now facing the cruel foe. Into the trenches, filled with mud and blood; into the clouds of poison-gas and the streams of liquid fire, into the iron hail, and the whirlwind of destruction, they have gone with shining eyes and shouts of defiance, to fight for us, and for a world of brothers. They'll drive the enemy back—WITH OUR HELP.

Now the sternest summons of duty, the holiest call of patriotism, comes to us for immediate answer. We must not, we can not, evade it. What are we at home going to do, this year, this month, to match the heroism and sacrifice of our boys in France? How are we, safe and snug at home, going to "dedicate our fortunes—everything that we have," to this supreme task, as we are called, now, to subscribe the Third Liberty Loan? We are expecting to read of American heroism in battle, of the invincible strength and courage of our armies as they meet the foe. But heroism and strength, and sacrifice in battle are not enough. They, alone, can never win the war. While we are looking eagerly to our armies, they are looking eagerly to us. They are expecting us to do our part with as complete devotion and sacrifice as they are doing theirs. If we at home fail our armies on the battle-line, they will—THEY MUST—fail us, and be swept away in defeat and disaster. This Third Liberty Loan means not the mere preparation of our armies, but their preservation on the battle-line, their very lives, and the victory they MUST HAVE if America and the whole cause of freedom are to escape unspeakable ruin.

Day by day we shall scan with throbbing hearts the casualty lists cabled from the American Army in the field. "The length of that casualty list depends on us." Every one of us is responsible. This Third Liberty Loan is to keep that casualty list down. Every Liberty Bond you buy this month is a life-saver sent by you to the boys in FRANCE.



This Loan must not fail; it must not even drag. Quick, eager oversubscription is our only possible action. Buying a few Liberty Bonds with money that can easily be spared will not now be enough. We must go deeper and lend until it hurts. We must square the shoulders, brace the back, grit the teeth, and lift until it strains every nerve and muscle. Every man's money must burn as hotly with love of country as does the fire in some men's blood. The Nathan Hales of to-day will go into the banks and the safety-deposit rooms and count their money and securities with eager, jealous thought of what they can do of heroic service, and then will exclaim, "I only regret that I have but one fortune to give for my country." Then "this nation, under God, will have a new birth of freedom." Then will our armies be invincible and victorious.

American Castor Oil for War Flying Machines

The flying machines above the battlefields in Europe are making a new call upon the farmers and manufacturers of the United States. Not content with the large quantities of gasolene which they are drawing from this, the greatest gasolene producing country in the world, they are now demanding castor oil. Under the rapid changes in temperature and air pressure which these machines must encounter in constant transitions from low to high elevations, they must have a lubricant which will flow under all conditions of temperature and atmospheric pressure, forming a thin film over every bearing and which will not carbonize. Castor oil has been found the most satisfactory lubricant under the circumstances, and as a consequence hurry calls have come to the United States, which is a limited producer of castor oil, for such supplies as may now be available and for a great increase in production as soon as this can be accomplished.

United States is probably the second world producer of castor oil, of which the world's demands have so constantly and unexpectedly developed. A compilation by the National City Bank of New York shows that the production of castor oil in the United States prior to the war aggregated something more than $1,000,000 per annum in value. Much of this output of the factories of the United States was produced from castor beans imported from India, the world's chief source of that product. Formerly the United States produced, especially on the Pacific Coast and in the Southern States, considerable quantities of the castor bean, but when the development of the petroleum industry produced a more satisfactory lubricating oil and at much less expense, the castor bean and oil industry failed to keep pace with the growth of other manufacturing industries of the country. As a consequence most of the castor beans used in producing the more than $1,000,000 worth of castor oil annually turned out in the United States, have been imported, the quantity entering the United States has been in 1913 844,000 bushels; in 1916 when the importance of the oil for aeroplanes began to be recog-

A BULL DURHAM PRESERVER

Charles Solle of Springfield, Ill., has forwarded to the American Tobacco Co. a sack of Bull Durham that dates back to March, 1879. Concerning the history of the relic, Mr. Solle says: "My father began his grocery business in 1873, carrying the ordinary stock of tobacco. In those days, woolens and furs were packed for the summer months with tobacco as a preserver, the packages being renewed from time to time, but this package evidently worked its way under the heavy padding of old paper in the bottom, where I found it some time ago."

THE ILL LUCK OF "OLD NICK"

The Cigarmaker Who Founded New York's Chinatown—A Historic Character in the Metropolis.

Away back in the days when Rutherford B. Hayes was President of the United States, began what is now New York's Chinatown. "Old Nick" was the first son of the Orient to establish a business in a section of the city that subsequently became "Chinafied."

"Old Nick," it is said, serving his apprenticeship in San Francisco, had become a skilled cigarmaker. Coming to New York, he started a cigar store at 6 Mott street. He made such cigars as he sold, working early and late, earning a reputation for honesty and industry that extended beyond the Five Points.

His cigar store prospered, and "Old Nick," a lone and somewhat timorous Chinese in the very centre of white gangdom, told his numerous cousins of the spendthrift habits of these swashbucklers he dwelt among. On his advice they gave up their toilsome laundries and came to live upon the dollars that the Bowery Boys were throwing about so recklessly.

Chinatown was started, and grew apace—likewise gambling, the favorite recreation of the tired Chinese business man. Therein "Old Nick" had digged a pit for himself. To the rattle of the buttons he lost his capital, his store, his home and his self-esteem.

By ways known only to the denizen of Chinatown he managed to survive by his own resources during the heyday of the community. The climax of prosperity that came with the hatchet men was the turning point in "Old Nick's" career.

For Chinatown's tong wars were too numerous and deadly; its gambling too notorious. Police raids and finally the firm hand of its own merchant class quelled such disturbances effectually. Chinatown began to dwindle, and the pickings for "Old Nick" grew poor.

Even "Old Nick's" real name was lost in the ill luck that overwhelmed him, and "Old Nick" was content to have it so, for from the high estate of founder and prominent citizen of Chinatown he had fallen so low as to be a panhandler. For that celestial nook off Chatham Square had never a beggar of its own before "Old Nick" and none since.

The erstwhile cigar manufacturer suffered a hemorrhage and fell unconscious Monday at 6 Mott street, headquarters of the Chinese Masons. It was on that very spot that he established a cigar store when, 40 years ago, that was the nucleus of the present Chinatown.

Unable to live much longer, "Old Nick" was taken to Gouverneur Hospital.

HE WANTED TO FIGHT

Since the United States entered the war, the desire to fight is not confined to those within the draft age. Many men, more than old enough to be exempted under the law, have volunteered. Some found it difficult to induce the recruiting officer to let them enlist. Determined to serve, they went to hospitals and had operations performed. They took special treatment to acquire physical fitness. Persisting, they obtained the coveted right to fight for the country. In this class, recently accepted, and now ambitious to become a proficient artilleryman, is Frank Livingston Huffaker, erstwhile editor of the Tampa Times and Tobacco's Tampa correspondent.

He was born in Rome, Ga. When he grew up, cruel fate fixed a place for him in a newspaper office. A newspaper man for more than 20 years, he experienced such joys and sorrows as life bestows on scribes. During the past 16 years, excepting a season in Washington and six months spent in the service of the Associated Press, he worked in Tampa. As city editor of the Tampa Herald, a newspaper now no more; as secretary of the Florida State Fair, and finally as editor of the Tampa Daily Times, "Huff" was an influence for good in South Florida.

He had an assured position. But, although entrenched, enviably, behind an editorial desk, he wasn't content to defend democracy merely with a pen. Instead of bombarding the enemy with words, he hopes to help clear the road to Berlin with shell fire.

As Tampa correspondent for Tobacco, Huffaker succeeded R. Davis Hutchcraft, who, after being called to the colors, gained admission to the officers' training camp at Columbia, S. C.

"YANKEEDOLLARDOM"

(Ellis Parker Butler in Leslie's Weekly.)

To tell the honest truth, I rather delight in some of the names Germany gives the United States. I like "The Land of the Almighty Dollar," and, even better, I like "Yankeedollardom." I am not in the least ashamed of the dollar. I would like to own just as many honestly-come-by dollars as possible. I am going right ahead getting as many of them as I can.

As a matter of fact, money was not invented until men were well out of barbarism and into civilization. I think I have read somewhere that the Babylonian shekel was the equivalent of one sheep, and was first coined to do away with the bother of using sheep as a medium of exchange. It would be something of a nuisance for a lady to go shopping on Fifth Avenue to-day if she had to take a flock of sheep along with her to pay for her purchases. It would be even more of a bother to shop in a department store on a busy day. Several thousand women rushing a bargain counter and trying to keep several thousand flocks of sheep in tow would be enough to drive the handsomest floor-walker stark, staring mad.

So the invention of money marked the transition from a state where peoples were wandering tribes to a state where they were more civilized. In much the same way the creation of the United States dollar marked the day when the doom of autocracy was sealed and democracy for the whole world had its birth. The silver dollar is the seal of the new freedom. Not until the United States became a nation was it able to coin dollars, and the day it began to coin dollars the world moved forward toward universal democracy. The Constitution of the United States was the seed, and Section VIII, which gave Congress the power to coin dollars, was as much a part of the Constitution as anything else in it. The United States dollar is a big thing, and never bigger than it is to-day.

Now, there are several ways of measuring how big a dollar is. I have known times when a dollar looked, to me, three and a quarter sizes larger than the moon—and harder to get—but that was not true mensu-

THE GERMINAL CIGAR AND CIGARETTE FACTORY IN MANILA

An up-to-date institution, noted for the excellence of its output, this big factory has the added distinction of being owned and managed by Filipinos exclusively. Germinal cigars obtain appreciation everywhere they are introduced, and Germinal cigarettes contribute mightily to the internal revenue of the Philippine Islands.

NOT ONE SIDESTEPPED

At the Tobacco Salesmen's Meeting Every Man Present Registered a Purchase of Liberty Bonds—Enthusiasm That Counts.

If members of the Tobacco Salesmen's Association were multi-millionaires, their subscriptions to the third Liberty Loan would have been bigger, of course. And to their bond purchases would be attached greater importance. Yet, so to speak, regarding time, the tobacco salesmen had the honor of leading the procession. The first minute of the day on which the mighty campaign opened, the Associated Press was prepared to inform more than 800 newspapers throughout the country that the Tobacco Salesmen's Association had set an example. At a meeting attended by 50 members, each man present registered himself as a Liberty Bond buyer. The determination was unanimous. Not one sidestepped or attempted to offer an excuse.

That constituted the news. The fact that 50 tobacco salesmen, assembled in their meeting place, subscribed for $8,650 worth of Liberty Bonds in fifteen minutes, wasn't a bit of news likely to startle the country.

Yet, all who attended the meeting held in the Hawthorne building, Friday night, had reason to agree that good work had been done. Or, better said, an important duty was well begun. For, until the campaign reaches its tremendously triumphant termination, each tobacco salesman is expected to aid and encourage Liberty Bond purchases in every way that he can.

Pertinent to efforts to be exerted in accelerating bond sales, excellent speeches were made by President Ollendorf, Jesse Powell and Asa Lemlein. The purpose was to inspire enthusiasm of that grim sort that keeps a man fighting his hardest, a determination to continue until victory is complete.

Smileage books were sent to all members and sons of members in the United States service.

And, in an appropriate petition, the postal authorities were urged to reconsider the order that prevents U. S. soldiers and sailors from receiving presents from home, sent by mail.

The committee in charge of arrangements for the ball that the association will give at the Palm Garden on the evening of May 12, reported excellent progress. Careful steps are being taken to make the dance most enjoyable in every respect. And everything indicates that the affair will be a splendid success, socially and financially.

MACHINE SPEEDED SALES

Murad cigarettes are smoked by the million. Murads are sold in ten thousand places in New York City. Beyond question, the brand is favorably known. Yet, if the old favorite is advertised in a new way, the attention of the crowd is attracted immediately. And quickly the sales increase. How extensively sales may be augmented by novel advertising has been demonstrated recently in Liggett drug stores in New York. Murad cigarettes, being steady sellers, were used in making a test of the Selfast advertising service.

Just to call H. J. Herberts' invention a "crowd attractor" wouldn't be quite fair. For the device, in motion, does more than draw notice. Practically, it induces the beholder to gaze intently at a clever advertisement. It causes attention to be concentrated. It excites curiosity. The average observer is not so sure "how the thing works." The mystifying features attach greater interest to what is advertised.

The effectiveness of an advertising device may be claimed. But utility is best proven by additional sales secured. If the interest manifested by the crowd outside the show window during the day leads to increased business, attested by the cash register each night, the desirability of the appliance can be conceded.

Crowds Constantly Attracted by the Selfast Device in the Window

The Mystifying Selfast Device

Notably, it is reported, the Selfast device boosted sales of Murad cigarettes, in Liggett drug stores.

H. J. Herberts, the electrical expert who devised the Selfast, exhibited his invention at the Grand Central Palace, in New York, last October. Favorably commented on, in the electrical trade papers, the advertising appliance, designed to be employed profitably in almost any show window, next was demonstrated at the National Hotel Men's Exposition. There it was shown in the booth of Theo. Photiatedes, the manufacturer of Banker's Special cigarettes.

Also the Selfast device has been tried in the show windows of stores of the Acker, Merrall & Condit Co.

In other trades, jewelry, millinery, paint, hardware, etc., the Selfast device had demonstrations in New York and Boston.

"UNITED" SALES INCREASE

Business for March, 1918, was $700,000 Ahead of March, 1917—Indicating $50,000,000 for the Year.

Sales of the United Cigar Stores Co. in March increased approximately $700,000 over the corresponding month a year ago. Sales for January and February increased $800,000 over the first two months of 1917, which indicates an increase of at least $1,500,000 for the first quarter of the year. If maintained at the same rate throughout the twelve months, such a gain would bring the year's total sales figures up to $49,000,000, an increase of about $6,000,000 over 1917.

"In this connection, however," the Wall Street Journal insists, "it must be remembered that in normal years the closing six months run ahead of the first half of the year. This would indicate sales figures for the year of above $50,000,000, the goal the company's officials set at the start of 1918."

For the twelve months ended December 31 last, United's business was slightly under $43,000,000. The total for 1916 was $36,000,000, and for 1915, $31,000,000.

Up to Date Docks in Havana—Machina Pier in the Foreground

The crop news from the Vuelta Abajo is, that the late rains undoubtedly will increase the quantity of fillers. One estimate now is that the crop may be only 20 per cent less than last year. Semi Vuelta seems bound to show up considerably better, as the harvest there is generally later than in the lowlands of the Vuelta Abao. In Havana has been shown some new libre de pie in bundles, of the Partido crop, which looked well. At present not much is said concerning Remedios, except that the light leaf will meet with a good demand and, weather conditions permitting, the escogidas may start up early.

Exports per S/S Mexico were: 406 cases, containing 1,720,130 cigars, which were consigned to the following countries, viz: to United States, 880,300; to Great Britain, 585,030; to Argentine, 140,600; to Canada, 73,700; to British Africa, 21,000, and to Australia, 19,500 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco, for the week ending March 18, totaled 7,404 bales, which were distributed to the following countries, viz: To all ports of the United States, 5,636; to Canada, 62; to Argentine, 1,496, and to Uruguay, 210 bales.

Leaf buyers arriving included: Manuel V. Pendas, of Y. Pendas & Alvarez, of Tampa; Ernest Ellinger, of Ernest Ellinger & Co.; and Joseph Mendelsohn, of Mendelsohn, Bornemann & Co., both of New York, and Francisco Bolano, of F. Bolano & Co., of Chicago. There returned from Spain, by the S/S Alfonso XIII, Angel Gonzales and family, of Gonzales Hermano & Co., and Jose Muniz and wife, of Muniz Hermanos.

Romeo y Julieta shipped 240,000 cigars to France recently and the factory is busy on further orders for that country. Romeo y Julieta is making 85,000 cigars per day, right along, an output which at this season has never been equalled before.

Partagas likewise is achieving a record production for this time of the year and Robert E. Lane has been in sending in excellent orders from the United States and Canada.

Punch is proceeding steadily as clockwork, getting cigars out for the British and American markets, and to a lesser extent to other countries.

Hija de José Gener is shipping its regular quota of cigars, by each Ward Line steamer to New York, every Saturday, also the factory working strong for Spain.

Belinda has no complaint to utter, as the demand for quality cigars is steadily increasing.

Eden reports good orders from the States, Australia, South Africa, Great Britain, Spain and South America, besides having good local orders for cigars, as well as cigarettes.

ROSAM.

Explaining a Bruised Knee

"This yere Hot Chair Club oughta send a Eyres floral tribute to Johnny Friendt," chimed in Benny, as he tacked on the wall two new Liberty Loan posters of the third offering, just left in the store by two Boy Scouts—a Yankee and a Jap.

"Why, Benny, what's Johnny been doin'?" asked Sam Ash, sitting down in the Supreme Councilor's throne-rest, between the two cracked cuspidors.

"Well, yer see," started Benny, "Georgie Cohan had Johnnie in mind when he wrote that part of 'Over There' which runs this way:

" 'Johnnie get your gun, get your gun, get your gun,
Take it on the run, on the run on the run,'

An', bein' a corp'ral in th' Home Defense, Johnnie's got a right ter pack a-gun in his bottle pocket wit' his bunch a-store keys.

"But he don't use it offen. For Johnnie's that kind uv a quiet, peaceabil feller thut don't hav' ter hav' no gun. Still, there's lots an lots uv provacashuns in a cigar store, an' don't you fergit it, eider!

"One uv them times happened ter Johnnie las' Thurs'ay. Fer in came a drunk ter th' J. W. Stevens' store lookin' fer trouble. Said as how he wuz Hell-Roarin' Bill Som-body-or-'Nother, an' he promised ter clean out th' place quicker than Johhnie behinst th' counter could do it wit' th' offishal mop-an'-duster.

"So a-course Johnnie tried to calm an' soothe 'im, sayin' p'r'aps he could, still, he wished he wouldn't! Well, th' felly didn't seem to 'preciate Johnnie's suggestions. On th' contrary, he aimed a shoulder-shot at Johnnie's periscope.

"An' here's where Johnnie quoted 'nother line from Georgie Cohan's, $25,000 song. Fer he saith:

" 'Hurry right away, no delay, go today!' addin' a li'l paraphrase of his'n ter th' chorus to encourage th' bum ter de-part as previously requested:

" 'An' prepare, say a pray'r,
Send th' word, send th' word ter beware!
Fer I'll be over, I'm comin' over,
An' I won't com' back 'till it's over, over there!'

To mak' this so, Johnnie started over th' top uv th' all-glass an' marble cigar case. But, lik' th' Ohioan in th' Rainbow Divishun who went after th' Hun wit'out his gun, Johnnie's foot slipped on th' tiled floor, an' he hit his kneecap an awful whack!

"Jest then, in came that big fella who sells Napoleon cigars. You know 'im. He's as big as a barn! Well, he merely picked that holy terror, rip-roarin' felly up by th' collar-an'-elbow movement, an' he threw him over on th' crossin', alongside of Hughie McGaughan an' Sarge Hoff, th' traffic copper.

THE SMOKER.

Concerning Wall Street maneuvers pertaining to tobacco stocks last week the New York Telegraph said: "In the early trading the so-called 'Whelan pools' added further to the discomfort of the large short interests in Tobacco Products and in the United Cigar Stores. There was no information forthcoming from the pool quarters, however, showing any real new basis for outside buying for long account. Quarters that have had good information on United Cigar Stores affairs in the past caused it to be inferred that they understand the dividend is not to be increased. The same interests were authority for the information that the Tobacco Products dividend is not to be decreased, but that payment may be made in scrip. The most impressive buying in the tobacco list again proved to be in American Sumatra."

D. Kossack operates a live cigar store at 1055 West Madison street. Kossack manufactures La Sential cigar. Also he carries all popular brands.

Lilienfeld Bros. are showing the trade new sizes of Corina clear Havana cigars.

Evanston cops have a plan for raising tobacco in their war gardens this year. The idea is to see that the boys over in France have all the weed they need. "So they won't feel cigawretched?"

The United Cigar Stores Co. has subleased from Charles Weeghman the front of the store in the Tacoma Building, 123 West Madison street. The lease runs for four years and the term rental amounts to $18,000.

The Dubonnet, reina Victoria size, packed 100 to the box, is well distributed with the trade. This size retails for 10 cents.

Thorwart & Roehling, jobbers of the Paramount brand, are getting a wide distribution for the 10-cent and 3 for 25-cent sizes. For a new brand Paramount has already proven to be a big winner.

Many Blanc & Co., the jobbers, are out with a new 2 for 25-cent size of the Garcia Grande cigar, front marked favoritas. Their eight salesmen are doing a big cigar business, and it is impossible to get enough Garcia Grandes or Gonzalez & Sanchez cigars to fill the orders that pile up. Their cigar factory operated under the name of Many, Koehne Co. is now in full working order, and their main brand, Shrine, is being placed with the local trade. The strike of the cigar markers that took place a short time ago has been settled. Manager Charles Winkelman reports business very big.

J. H. Weiss & Co., 329 South La Salle street, have taken on the Perfecto Garcia brand in several sizes. Dubonnet is also a new offering at this well-known store.

The Daily News Fund for the boys in France took a big jump during the past week. It is now over the $18,000 mark and growing every day.

Managers of forty Chicago hotels, who met at the Hotel Sherman a few days ago, agreed that $2,000,000 should be their quota in the Third Liberty Loan campaign. All promised to exert every effort to raise that amount before the campaign closes.

W. D. Fleak, in charge of the Schinasi sales force, paid Rockford a visit to boost Naturals at Camp Grant.

Frank Elliott, representing E. P. Cordero & Co., is still around town. Frank has just closed a deal with a local house to job one of his clear Havana brands in this territory. The name of this wholesaler is withheld for the present.

The Lynch cigar, popular with the West Side trade, is made by the J. J. Lynch Cigar Co., Chicago.

Clear Title is going stronger than ever with Iwan Ries & Co., the jobbers. D. M. Frank & Co. are the makers of this 5- and 6-cent seller.

Audacia, made in Tampa by Garcia Diaz & Co., is now 6 cents. An increased demand is reported on this brand.

Going around the city one sees a number of Girard signs displayed in the windows. The distributors of Girards are placing them in new stores every day.

L. & I. Rubovits, the Board of Trade cigarists, are out with a new one that retails for 7 cents. It is called Skill and is packed both in cans and wood boxes.

Cy De Vry has cut down by 80 per cent the bread eaten at the Lincoln Park Zoo, substituting hay, oatmeal and other conservatives. "Zoopreme patriotism," as it were.

The "United" is displaying full windows of Qboid and Edgeworth tobaccos.

The Clayton Cigar Co. has taken on the Du Belle, a fine clear Havana brand, made by Francisco Arango & Co.

Albert Breitung is out with a new size of Havana Merits called Junior Fives that sells for 5 cents. They are put up in bundles of five and are made by Jeitles & Blumenthal. The old size Havana Merit still sells at 6 cents.

The Chicago Retail Cigar Dealers' Association is offering new members special dues until they reach a membership of 500. To cigar dealers the special offer is $5 per year and to jobbers $10. After 500 have been enrolled the fees will be $10 to dealers and $15 to jobbers.

George Weicker, a cigar dealer at 342 West Kinzie street, was held up by bandits, who seemed dissatisfied because the hold-up yielded only $6.

Charlie Winkelman is as busy as a bee trying to fill the orders that roll in for Garcia Grande cigars.

Walter Berger, a well-known cigarette man who has been in this field for several years promoting the products of P. Lorillard Co., has been transferred to California. H. A. Mackey, in charge of the sales force, has resigned.

Clark Cutler keeps up the god work for M. Bustillo & Co. He has just placed the Invocar brand of clear Havana with Leopold & Mergentheim, who will feature it in their box business. A line of the finer sizes will be carried.

William Penn in the Savoy shape is going good. They sell 2 for 25 cents and are wrapped in foil.

The Fifth Avenue Smoke Shop, at 38 North Wells street, operate a factory in connection with the retail store. Salomon Bros. are the owners.

M. B. Siegel, in his stores, is doing a good business with the James Lenox 5-cent stub shape cigar. Romeo Garcia club life and club quality little cigars in packages of 10 are proving big sellers with him.

Fred Oakes has renewed for three years the lease on the store in the Ashland Block where he has operated an up-to-date cigar store under the name of Shoemaker & Co.

The Monroe Cigar Exchange, P. Bauer manager, which opened a retail store at 176 West Monroe street about three weeks ago, closed up on March 30. Bauer will connect with a local factory shortly and will again work the retail trade.

An Easter offering with M. B. Siegel's trade was either a one-pound box of candy or a 50-cent pack of playing cards free with each $2.50 purchase. Business was big while the offer lasted.

George S. Themelis, of Themelis Bros. Co., manufacturers of Themelis Rose Tip cigarettes, is in the city. Several jobbers carry this brand of cigarettes and a good sale is reported.

Ray Krintz, stock man for A. Schulte, has been drafted and is in training at Camp Grant.

Schulte's Specials, 5 centers once, have advanced to 6 cents.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Marco, daughter of Sam Marco, a well-known Chicago cigar man, to Mr. Goldbacker.

Clark Cutler left this week for Kansas City, Des Moines and for Texas points, to feature M. Bustillo Co.'s lines.

Fred Oakes was another of the "home" boys to leave on a trip. Fred has gone to Missouri, Iowa and other points to preach E. H. Gato's brands of fine cigars.

Murads, Moguls, Helmar and Turkish Trophies have again advanced in price. Things are looking up.

Cutting still goes on. One dealer at 12th and Wabash is selling Camels at 11 cents. He has his window full and the sign reads, "Why pay more?" A dealer on Wells street near Madison says "my price is 13 cents for Camels; buy here." These fellows are causing a lot of trouble to the other dealers. H. L. H.

He Let the Bolsheviki Beat Themselves

Smith is doing a good business uptown. Smith is not his name, but it will serve for the purposes of the story. He has been manufacturing cigars for years and always has tried to steer clear of labor troubles. He employed Union help and when his workmen made a reasonable demand he granted it, quoting the motto: "Live and let live." Then some of the Bolsheviki went to work for him, making his cheaper cigars. They were not impressed favorably by the friendly relations between the boss and the old hands. So they set about to create trouble. They insisted that the boss should pay more money for the work, and they continued to prod the satisfied workers until the latter went to Smith and asked for an increase. The Bolsheviki crowd figured that if the old hands obtained the increase, they would be in a position to kick for more or have an excuse to call a strike.

Smith was willing to grant the increase to his old workers but had no intention of letting the trouble makers have everything their own way. How to beat them was a problem. After pondering over the matter for some time he discovered a solution. He said to the committee: "I am perfectly willing to give an increase, but I can't do it on the cheaper grade. So I am willing to meet you half way."

"We ain't gonna split any money on the thing," the spokesman for the Bolsheviki replied.

"I'm not asking it," Smith declared. "I'll pay the increase on the good cigars and let all those making the cheap grade go to work on the good. This will give everybody a chance to make more. But if any one fails to make good on the better grade and wants to continue working he will have to make the cheap stuff at the old price. I will keep on making the cheap stuff simply to give those who can't make the good cigars a chance to keep busy. How does that strike you?"

The Bolsheviki took the matter under consideration and that afternoon reported that they were willing to tackle the good cigars at the increased price. Smith waited three days and at the end of that time the Bolsheviki bunch threw up their hands. They had been unable to turn out the goods. They had spoiled some material in their experiments, but Smith regarded such loss as a good investment. And those who did not quit went back to making the cheap cigars at the old price. The fellows who went out sought jobs at other factories, and when last heard of were trying to stir up new trouble. For the time being at least, Smith has rid himself of a lot of pests.

A Fiesta in the Philippines

In 1882 the Tobacco Monopoly in the Philippine Islands was ended by a decree of the Governor General. The natives of the towns and villages joyously celebrated the event by holding fiestas in the northern provinces of Luzon where the greater part of Philippine tobacco is grown. This monopoly had continued in operation for a hundred years and during that time "Manila" cigars found a ready market and won a splendid reputation when permitted to reach the shelves of cigar and tobacco dealers in countries where tariff laws did not prevent their importation.

Manila cigars of standard quality maintained by the Philippine Government have repeated their successes in the United States during the past two years.

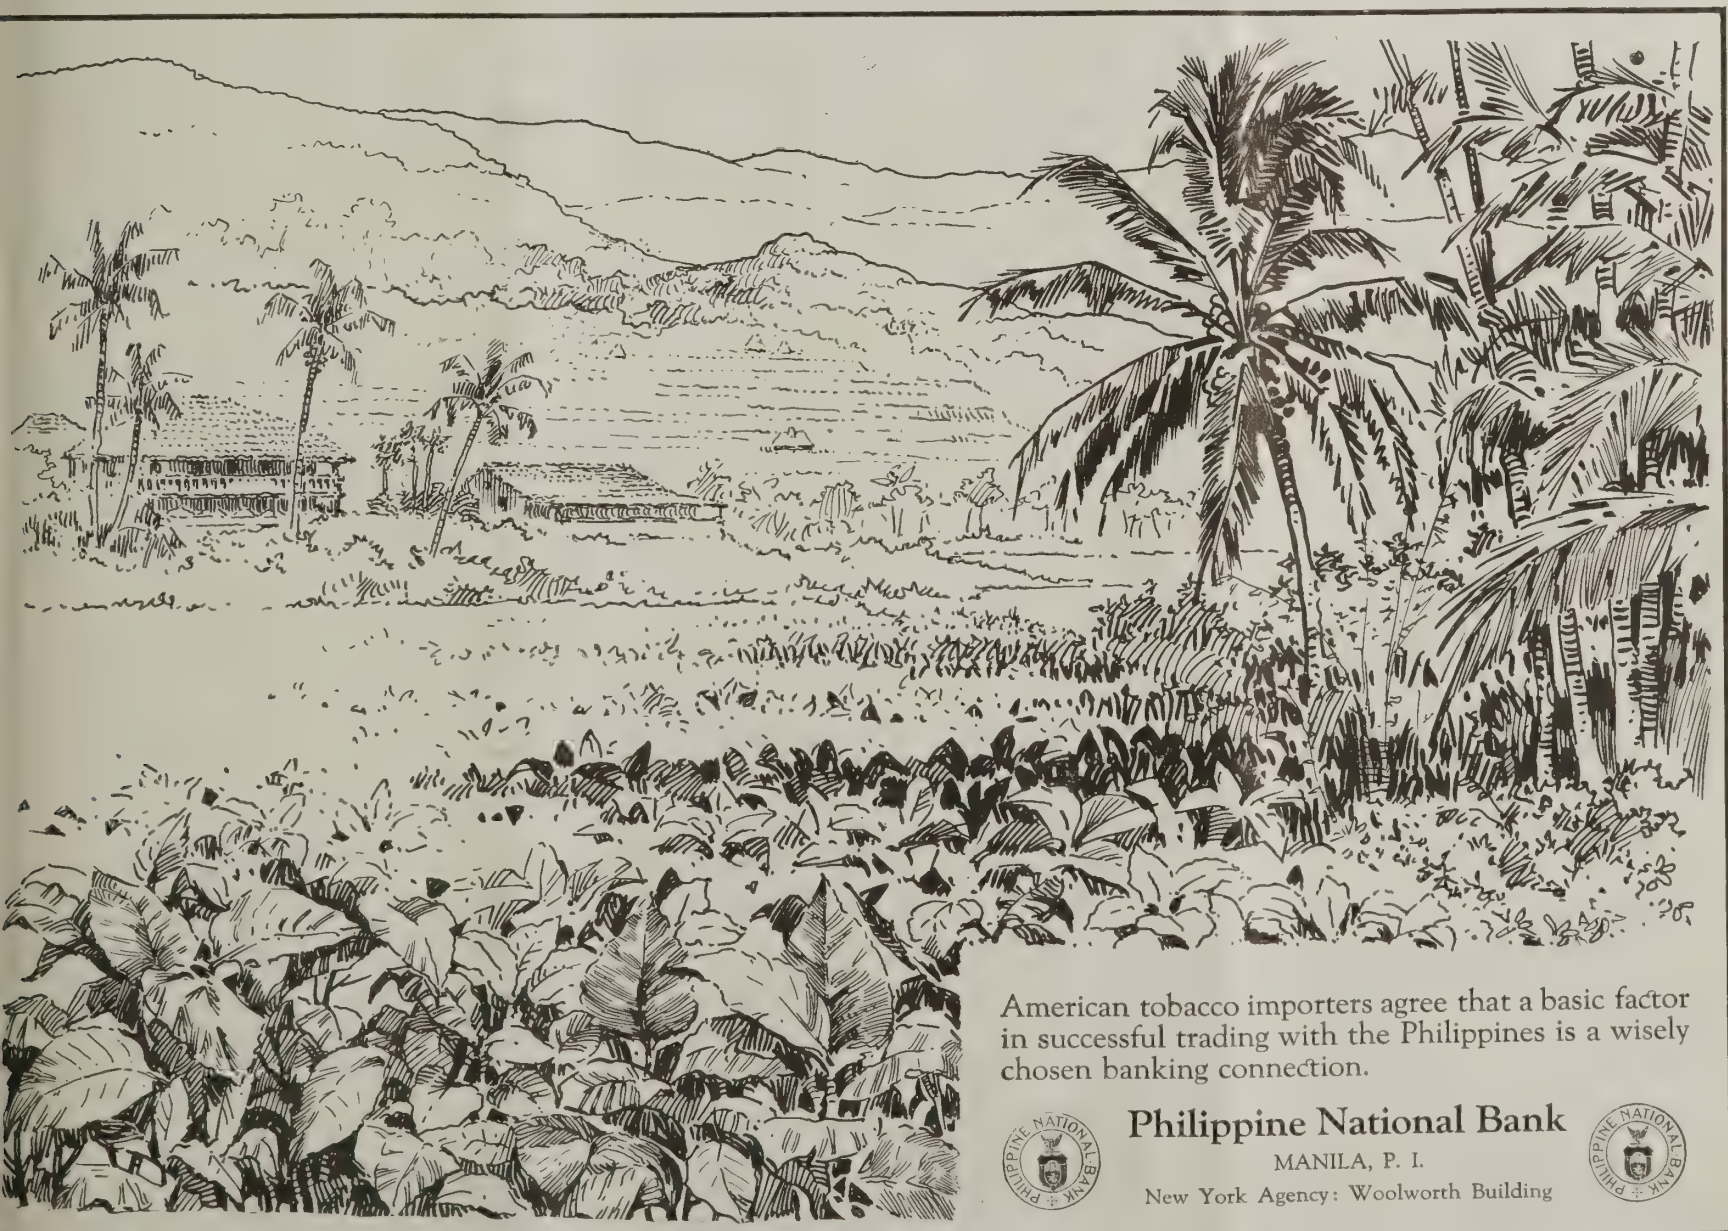
Tampa's Liberty Day Celebration

TAMPA, Fla., April 7.—Ample evidence of the loyalty of the Cuban and Spanish cigarmakers of the city was indicated yesterday by their presence in the Liberty Day parade, by the thousands. Ybor City and West Tampa were as well represented in the crowd which marched through the principal streets and over to Plant Field as the less cosmopolitan sections of the city. The greatest crowd that has ever gathered in Plant Field, it is conceded, was on hand for the public speaking, the military features and the especial hit of the afternoon—a graphic portrayal of the overrunning of Belgium by German soldiers. Between 25,000 and 30,000 were present.

This scene, directed by Jack Noble and others of the Frohman Amusement Corporation and Birth of a Race Corporation, was probably as unique a Liberty Day feature as there was in the country. Actors took the parts of Kaiser Wilhelm and his general staff, with others playing the roles of Belgians. Only the old men, the women and the children were left in the village which had been erected by the movie corporation for the purpose. The German invaders came into the village and committed atrocities that were almost sickening, even in the portrayal.

Tampa was closed up tighter for the Liberty day demonstration than the city has ever been before—even on a Sunday. From 1 o'clock until 5 o'clock stores were shut tight. Every place where food or drinks are procurable, even to the fruit stands, were closed. Drug stores, groceries, markets, mercantile and wholesale establishments, offices of every kind, and of course the cigar factories of Tampa and West Tampa, abandoned business for the afternoon. A slogan, "Saturday afternoon belongs to Uncle Sam," was fully realized.

Osmond L. Roberts, a son of Frank O. Robberts, foreman at M. Stachelberg & Co.'s factory here up to 10 years or so ago and now connected with the cigar industry at New York, was the first graduate of the government school of navigation to get a license. Young Roberts, who has seen service in the United States Navy, came here from his home at Key West when the U. S. Shipping Board opened its navigation school in Tampa. Completing the course in less than the customary six weeks, he passed the examination and is now qualified for service as a deck officer in Uncle Sam's new merchant marine.



Protest has been made by Tampa merchants and cigar manufacturers in regard to concessions having been given to a cigar store syndicate by which it has exclusive rights to supply cigars at the two aviation camps near Arcadia, Fla. Eli Witt, a local distributor for a number of the famous cigar factories, sought to place Tampa cigars on sale there, only to find that the rights had been granted the syndicate. The matter has been taken up by Sen. Park Trammell, who is determined Florida dealers and makers should be given an equal opportunity and fair play at camps and cantonments in Florida, at least.

After considerable effort Judge J. T. Watson, Jr., of this city, has succeeded in getting the railroad administration to issue permits necessary to move about 1,000,000 pounds of tobacco for him, from points in North Carolina, Virginia and Kentucy to Pennsylvania. The tobacco came into his control on the death of his father in Virginia recently. Twelve carloads, consigned to Pennsylvania, from Southern Railway points, were being held up because the Pennsylvania railroad declined to accept it for delivery. Through Representative H. J. Drane, Representative Andrew R. Brodbeck of Pennsylvania, and Senator Bois Penrose of Pennsylvania, he secured the necessary permits, and the tobacco is now moving or at its destination.

Manuel J. Pendas, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jaime Pendas, enlisted Friday in the U. S. Navy as an apprentice seaman. Mr. Pendas, one of the best known of local cigar manufacturers, for a number of years, and now manager of M. A. Gunst & Co., Inc., is also president of the Centro Austriano society.

Among a number of flag raisings which took place locally last week was one at the San Luis Cigar Factory, where a flag purchased by employes of the plant was formally raised. Mayor D. B. McKay, Rev. R. A. Smith, Rev. Oliver Williams and J. F. Setrouse took part and made addresses. After the flag had been raised it was lowered to half mast in memoriam of Charles A. Goines, a former worker at the San Luis factory, whose death occurred recently at Camp Wheeler, Macon, Ga.

Word received here that the entire output of Bull Durham had been taken over by the government has aroused speculation among the smokers as to whether they will be able in the future to "roll their own" with that many-years favorite of the cigarette smoker.

The Up State Tobacconist Who Is a Raconteur

A Series of Discourses Applicable to Cigar Trade

New York State Capitol District,
April 8, 1918.

"Shad uv Saugerties!" blurted Benny, as he stuck another thrift-stamp in the proper place, "this yere Capitol District is gonna raise twenty-five milluns uv dollars for th' Third Liberty Loan, startin' ter day! Gee-ja! An' nobody coulda forgot this yere mawnin', eider, fer ev'ry door-knob wuz deckorated wit' one uv them there cut-out Liberty Bells, sayin' 'Ring It Ag'in.' Even th' fire-box had one on!

"Writin' ter som' frens of hisn," accounted Benny, as he filled the Beechnut jar with Spearmint, "I notis Sergeant Amos Prescott of Albany sez yer kin git a 25-cent packet of cig'rets fer 9 cents in France, providin' yer wear Uncle Sam's campaign-hat wit' t'ree dents in th' dome.

"An' he all-so furdermor' sez, a soldat, which same is Picardy fer a fightin' man, kin git four quarts uv red wine an' four mugs uv cognac all fer 6 francs, 60 centimes, som'thin' lik' $1.15 in U. S. A. stuff. While sugar is on'y 4½ cents th' pound in France, an' 10 cents right here in th' Capitol District.

"Then, agin, if a trooper wants a seven day furlough, which he kin have if he wants it ev'ry four months (an' mebbe he don't take it!), he pays on'y one-fo'rth reg'lar R. R. fare. English soldiers travel free in their own countree, under certain conditshuns. While over here, a frenamine paid $50 ter run upter Albany f'om Spartanburg, jest th' same as a government contractor or food profiteer would shove in th' winder fer th' vera i-dent-i-kill ticket. But it takes a dough-boy t'ree months ter git that $50 tergedder, an' som' uv dese silk-hat pirates git th' cash in t'ree minutes widout puttin' th' offishel t'ree dents in their crown-piece, eider!"

"But whasause a-kickin'?" axed Benny, as he posted a new window-bulletin announcing Nebo cigarettes 'Now 10 for 7 cents.' Sure, t'ings ain't 'zactly th' way we want 'em. Still, they're improvin' ev'ry day. Why, here's this Watervliet Arsenal housin' proposishun. Chambers uv Commerce in Troy an' Albany are sendin' delegates 'round f'om mansion ter villa, includin' even th' bungalows an' dog-kennels, tryin' ter fin' room fer th' workers upter th' Gover'ment gun-fact'ry.

"Dese fellers wearin' th' roun' tags on their coats ain't gittin' a cent for helpin' th' War Apartment out on this here t'ing. Dey jest do it becuz they're glad ter give both th' Countree an' th' County a li'l lift in th' 'mergency, that's all! A-course, th' Ordnance fellers promise t'ousands an' t'ousands uv workin' men ter come here an live an' spend their big pay. So, in th' long run, it'll turn out all right, mebbe. Jest now, though, ev'ry fella I meet is doin' somethin' fer nawthin', besides spendin' his own money ter do it!"

While Benny was moppin' th' floor, cleanin' up fer th' mawnin' rush, in sauntered Scott Barton, th' State Capitol cigarist. "Hello, Benny," sez Scott, pushin' his dicer back on his head, "warm, ain't it?"

"Yes, 'tis that, Mr. Barton," agrees Benny, pausin' ter wipe away a sweat-tear f'om his marble-brow. "How's t'ings upter th' $25,000,000 palace on th' hill?"

"Oh, business is very fair, Benny," replied Scott, side-steppin' th' swirlin' mop, "but this 6-cent cigar game ain't bein' played 'cordin' to th' rules. Now you'd naturally think 6-cent cigars would sell just like th' fives use to do. Tho they don't. Seven-cent stuff goes better with me, White Owls particularly. Yes, sir."

"Nevertheless," continued Scott, "this shortage of material, size an' shape changes, an' so on, has given us all an opportunity to clean up on odds an' ends, I think. Rapid an' various stock an' price revisions have undoubtedly resulted in puzzling th' smoker, an' that seems to account for the shifting of trade from brand to brand. Cigars an' cigarettes which are popular today are the reverse tomorrow. Though, of course, th' standard advertised goods will continue to maintain their sales.

"Yes, the Legislature adjourns sine die within the next two weeks. Then, if conditions are as fine as the weather is now, the trade up my way will change from Statesmen to tourists, 'til long after th' Summer is past."

Hardly had Benny put his mop an' pail behind th' cellar-door before someone else shouted in: "Well, well! There's my ole fren' Benny! Howsareye?"

Lookin' up, Benny beheld a chap he hadn't seen afore since three years comin' nex' Dewey Day! "Gee-ja! Charlie Hibbard! Wher' ya bin, Charlie—hidin' in Mesopotamia?"

"Nay, nay," sez Charles, pullin' a strip uv eight street-car tickets outa his pocket, "I paid a quarter for these, an' there's only one town in th' nation where you can get so many for th' price, and that's where I now live—Columbus.

"Yes," went on Charlie, bitin' th' end off'n a Pinzon cigar, "after leavin' the tobacco business in Rochester I accepted an appointment as Auditor of the Supreme Council of the United Commercial Travelers.

"This is somewhat different from the cigar trade. Though, at times, it is still necessary to travel. In fact, I'm now on my way to Boston. But most of the time I am home in Columbus, a city about so large as Rochester. No, I never see my old neighbor, Art Lauer, whose home is yet in Rochester, though he's selling El Yutan cigars somewhere in Pennsylvania and New Jersey now, I understand."

When Jim Stubb got down to the store, ar-rivin' on a schedule established previous to Big Ben's sunrise-saving system, Charlie Hibbard had gone to the station to catch the B. & A. snail-express. So Beny was tellin' him about the unexpected visit when Sam Ash came hurryin' in with news that Cuyler Ten Eyck had at last decided to close up shop.

"His stock an' fixtures are for sale, Jim," announced Sam, hurriedly changin' his new Spring coat for Jim's office alpaca, "an' the stand in the Arkay Buildin' is to let. Rose & Kiernan, the owners, will remodel the place to suit tenant, they say, an', eventually, the Black Taxi people, who also have a stand there, may take the cigar privileges, too. Changed around a bit, this location at State an' South Pearl ought to make one of the best cigar stands in Albany, Jim."

Then, just as Sam had settled down to arrangin' th' general orders for th' day, in blew Metropolitan Fleischmann, th' Manila-Man: "Ah! Glad to see the entire firm of Stubb & Ash on duty so early. And how's th' stock on Alcalzars, Magellanes, an' th' various other principal brands stamped 'via S. S. Tenyo Maru?'"

"What you talkin' about—Manilas, Fleish? Why, we can't get those we've already ordered. Every time a new shipment arrives it is strapped, corded, an' sealed over a label we never saw before. How can you develop trade on brands like that?" And Sam snapped 'round in his swivel-seat as though Fleischmann was personally responsible for the condition of the Philippine cigar business.

"Well, I'll tell you, Mr. Ash," explained Fleischmann, passin' over a fortieth of another new label that Sam had never heard of before; "shipping matters in the Pacific are simply rotten, even the Jap-Maru being sent through the Panama to Atlantic service.

"So, you see, we have to take what we can get. And now it's said the Filipinos are about to organize 27,000 men for service in France as a division of troops to help our Uncle Sammy. Quite likely most of these men will be cigar-makers, and that won't ease the situation any that I can see. Therefore, you'd better buy now, while the buying's good, no matter what the label looks like on the box. For most Manilas are pretty fair cigars, even though the brands are rather mixed and assorted, a la many other varieties besides the famous 57."

In the mail, which Jim Stubb was still thumbin' through, was a carte postale from Jobber W. F. Orr, of Gloversville. Since his visit of last week somethin' had happened, an' 'twas: "All prices on Eccentric cigars withdrawn this day. New list will be forwarded to you very soon."

And then Frank Bradt entered the turnstile of the wholesale an' retail house of Stubb & Ash. "Good morning, gentlemen," saluted Frank, "pleased to see you here assembled this beautiful day."

"How's things in West Albany, Frank?" axed Mr. Stubb, shovin' over one of Fleischmann's Manilas for a smoke, "Are the railroad shops workin' full time?"

"No," answered Frank, lightin' up, "they're not. Men are scarce, an' the Government railroad pay isn't so good as, for instance, the same Government wage for the Watervliet Arsenal shops. Result, the boys are quittin', goin' in for munitions rather than accept the low standard the West Albany yards and construction plants offer on a comparative labor basis. And that's the reason trade on Central avenue is a trifle slow, just at the time, too, when business all over the city is pickin' up quite nicely."

"That makes me think," recalled Jim Stubb, lightin' a Fleischmann Manila himself, "of Chet Dyer. For, just at the time that lots an' lots of small cigar factories are closin' up, goin' out of business because of high material costs and scarce labor, Chet is workin' along, just about the same as usual, makin' a pile of cigars in his Albany factory. And he sells 'em, too, right in places where other fellows say things are fierce, because of the draft, Liberty Loans, and the several other popular reasons usually advanced for bum business." Jim blew some Manila smoke over the filing cabinet, and he added: "Poor trade doesn't allus foller the service-flag!"

"Say, Jim," spoke up Sam Ash, makin' a swipe for th' first fly of th' season, buzzin' over his still sore February-frosted ear, "I see some city employees puttin' up street traffic signs today which were of the familiar 'Turn to the Right' variety. And they reminded me of the sales-boys who line up at the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co. Almost any hour of the day you'll find 'em there in a row, all on the right side of the store, waitin' for a crack at Ed or Will on some cigar, cigarette, tobacco, pipe, or similar proposition. They sure do 'Turn to the Right'!"

"That's pretty tough on Bill Van Auken," said Mr. Stubb. "You know he's been a lieutenant in the army since he left Myron Canaday at the Hotel Ten Eyck cigar stand. And, after going from Albany to his station in Texas, he returned in December to marry Miss Miller.

"So the couple were back at Fort Clark when Bill received orders. Then his wife came home in March, and she became ill. Typhoid fever developed rapidly, and Van Auken was sent for immediately. He arrived in the city a day or two before she died, only 21 years of age, and married less than four months."

"This makes me think of George Haskins," mused Sam Ash, "for you'll recollect there's been no one through the Capitol District for the account of Dick Bachia since George died.

"On Wednesday, though, George Becker came in. Said he'd been designated by R. A. Bachia y Ca. to cover New York, in addition to his territory in the Middle West. So he copped out a fairly good pile of orders on the new war sizes and shapes of the Bachia green label line before he departed for the run to Denver."

"Kinda soft for the Liggett & Myers' boys in the tobacco department, Sam," interjected

The Golden Glow Beneath the Froth

Business Begins to Brighten in Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE, April 4.—Business during the past week lost none of its previous intensity. The general turnover is very good, and the undercurrent exerts a strong pull toward prosperity. It is, of course, possible that April will be a "summer" month this year, but it is always good business sense to be prepared for the opposite conditions for, nominally, here April is a raw, blustery month. Price fluctuations continue to be the one chief cause for concern with the dealers. But the trade is grappling successfully with this problem. Wherever there has been no definite plan made regarding selling prices, to provide for the many constant changes, attention is demanded, for there is little likelihood of steady, uniform and staple prices for some time to come, regardless of the war's duration.

Oscar Buxbaum, jobber of fine cigars, is doing a big business. He controls Perfecto Garcia, made in bond cigars, which he carries in 32 sizes; the New Optimo in 15 sizes; Originator of E. M. Schwarz & Co. in 6 sizes; Vegas Cubans, La Anda, 3 sizes; Olypmiad Jr. and Cuban Rio 5-cent cigars.

George W. Stocking, of Marcelino Perez & Co., was a visitor here recently, and took some good orders for Tuvals.

George's Cigar Store on East Water street has a fine Royal Nestor display in his window.

Maurice Rothschild, city man for John Hoffman Co., does a fine business. La Palina is his leading seller.

In many cases is seen the Girard brand of Antonio Roig & Langsdorf.

Don Corello smokers are found in all of the stores of Leo Abraham.

Cyros, mild Havanas from Welcher Bros. of New York have a good distribution with the local trade, and dealers report a steady call for this well-known brand.

Charters of E. M. Schwarz Co. sell for 6 cents. The glass jar packing is popular in Milwaukee.

Florencia Vega & Co., of Chicago, manufacture Fred's Cuban smokers for the Fred Weil Cigar Co.

Frank Elliott, on a recent visit here for E. P. Cordero & Co., placed his line with Oscar Buxbaum.

Mozarts are selling in fine shape. Hardly a store in Milwaukee is without this brand.

Santa Rey, in keeping with other former 5-cent cigars, has graduated to the 6-cent class.

Leo Pollock, a popular Cream City boy, is boosting the brands made by Louis Kindling Co. Leo is doing well.

The Fred Weil Cigar Co. operates a large cigar store on East Water street. There are featured in many sizes La Palina, Tadema, Perfecto Garcia and Charles the Great. "Business is good" with this young and progressive firm.

Brands featured in the stores of Leo Abraham are Lovera, Adelina Patti, M. A. C., Tadema, La Palina, Mozart and Charters. Sales are showing a big gain at the house of Abraham.

One of the biggest selling 10-centers in the city is La Palina, jobbed by John Hoffman Co. and manufactured by the Congress Cigar Co. of Chicago.

The A. S. Goodrich Co., which controls Garcia Grande cigars here, have many window displays that are helping the sale of this fast seller.

The Mozart brand is placed with the trade by M. L. Ammenberg.

The Plankinton Hotel cigar department is now offering Cuesta Rey cigars to their trade.

The wholesale drug firm of Yahr & Lange reports Rose o' Cuba cigars going strong. Sales are increasing right along.

Joe Mallon, the Grand avenue dealer, has displayed in his window this week Tom Moore, which is a good seller with him.

Fred Crombie does a big business. Fred caters to the finest trade and carries only the best goods in stock.

Go into any store that carries pipes and you are sure to find a good assortment of Frank's pipes and holders.

White Owls are moving rapidly at the new 7-cent price.

Prince Albert tobacco now sells for 15 cents, and Camels also are sold at this price.

Nestor cigars will advance May 1 to 6 cents. The Nestor is made by E. M. Schwarz & Co. It is packed in cans as well as wood boxes.

Otto Hunt, at 514 Grand avenue, is showing Romeo Garcia Club Life little cigars that sell 2 for 5 cents.

La Palina, rosita size, is some seller. They still sell for 5 cents and are packed in cans of 25.

In the Fay Lewis stores Harvesters and El Sidelo cigars get a big play. They are tremendous sellers with this firm.

Duke of Manchester short smokes for 5 cents move right along. This little smoke has proven a winner locally.

The Wright Drug Co. on Wisconsin street has a large Robert Burns window display.

At the Owl Drug store on Grand avenue, Tom Keenes at 6 cents are great sellers. A large Tom Keene sign holds the center of a fine window display.

Pekarsky Bros. are the jobbers of "44" cigars, and they have succeeded in getting a big distribution for "44's."

La Venga, made by Celestino Vega & Co., of Tampa, is placed with the Otto C. Knell Co., who ever are pushing this fine clear Havana to the front.

Harvesters are big repeaters. Fay Lewis & Bro. take care of the distribution of the Harvester brand.

Otto P. Hunt Co. displays Mi Estela "10-cent quality cigar," which they are offering as a leader for 7 cents. A large and attractive window display is making many friends for Mi Estela.

In the United windows Fatima gets much space in the displays.

A number of Murad signs are seen on the windows of the Milwaukee stores.

At the third and Grand avenue store a full line of popular cigarettes and the well known M. A. C. cigar in various sizes is shown in a big display.

Mi Carmen, one of the best sellers here, is made by the Cirilo Fernandez Co.

The Otto P. Hunt Co. features First Consul, Webster, La Venga, Lozano and a full line of Mi Carmen and Charles the Great cigars.

The W. D. C. pipes of William DeMuth & Co. are placed with all the leading dealers.

John Ruskin has many friends and is a good seller. Numerous Ruskin cigars are seen. John Ruskins now sell for 6 cents.

The Hotel Martin Phasy, on Wisconsin street, has the upper part of their windows painted, bearing La Preferencia cigars.

Harry L. Harris, of Harris-Schwarz Co., Inc., called on the trade here. Several accounts were opened on brands made by this firm.

The New Optimo is selling, and new friends are being made for this brand right along. You see it in all the cases.

The National Cigar Co. manufactures Mi Cori brand that is stocked by all the dealers.

Sig Mayer "makes the Cream City" for F. Lozano & Sons of Tampa. Sig has not overlooked anybody, for you see Lozanos on sale in all the good spots.

Fred Bailey's visit here developed some good customers for the M. Perez & Co.'s line.

Americus mild Havanas from Francisco Torre & Co. gets the support of the sales force of Otto C. Knell Co.

Ray Schwaiger, of the retail sales force of Fay Lewis & Bro. Co., has joined the army.

Marcus Feder, of London Whiff fame, gave the trade the once over recently. He booked several fine orders.

Dan Sully, from E. M. Schwarz Co., is controlled by Oscar Buxbaum, who carries it in the can and wood boxes.

Tadema, the cigar "for men of taste," is an old time favorite here with smokes of clear Havanas.

M. A. C. is a popular local seller. It is made at the factory of Leo Abraham & Co., who run an up-to-date factory on East Water street. The factory, while young in business, is growing very fast and at present forty cigar makers are working.

A shipment of 175,000 Perfecto Garcia, made in bond cigars, is expected to arrive shortly for the distributor, Oscar Buxbaum. The shipment consists of only the finer sizes of this well-known brand.

E. R. Godfrey & Sons Co. are the jobbers of Richard Mansfield and Sanchez Grande cigars. Both have a good sale in the city.

The John Carver cigar has been taken on for distribution by the Schneider Tobacco Co. The brand is made by the J. C. Newman Cigar

Mi Lola, from the factory of The Mi Lola Co. of Cleveland.

Cigar Co., can boast of sales equal to any brand on the local market. Mi Lola cigar factory is located in the heart of Milwaukee.

Marie Antoinette, of E. Kleiner & Co., is placed in several stores and is a good repeater.

Clark Cutler pulled off several good deals on his recent visit to this city, the biggest one being the placing of Flor de Bustillo with Oscar Buxbaum for distribution throughout the state of Wisconsin.

Bull Durham is being demonstrated in many of the down-town stores. A crew of young men are showing the smokers how to mix Bull with other brands of smoking.

Issy Lederer perhaps is the best-known cigar man in Milwaukee. Issy used to run a fine retail store here. He now is representing the Congress Cigar Co., of Chicago, and is making Milwaukee his home. Nearly every dealer carries and pushes La Palina brand, and as Issy is always on the job, he gets a big play from the boys.

Kentucky and Tennessee farmers are burning their tobacco beds; in fact, a goodly number have already sown their seeds. High prices received for the crop just marketed have made it desirable to increase the acreage in 1918, but the temptation is being resisted. In the first place they recognize that genuine American patriotism calls for all extra acreage and labor to be devoted to foodstuff production; and secondly, they realize that all the extra labor available this year will be such additional exertion as the farmers themselves (and their children) can put forth. Whatever increase develops in this year's tobacco crops is likely to result from better cultivation, rather than enlarged acreage.—Southern Tobacco Journal.

OVER THE TOP

ROI-TAN goes "over the top" of the case faster than any other brand. Year after year ROI-TAN holds the world's championship for quality and popularity.

Live dealers feature ROI-TAN because it spells big volume and quick turnover. From the standpoint of both dealer and smoker ROI-TAN "THE PERFECT CIGAR" is the one best bet—now, tomorrow, always.

Plans for a Cuban Exhibit at Cincinnati

Foreign Trade Convention to see the Value of the Pearl of the Antilles

HAVANA, Cuba, April 6.—Notable recognition of the Republic of Cuba, for its achievement in amassing new record figures in its foreign trade with the United States last year, has been paid by the National Foreign Trade Council of the United States, which will hold its annual sessions in Cincinnati, April 18, 19 and 20. The Council, which includes in its membership practically every figure of "big business" in the United States, has invited the Cuban Government to install an exhibit showing the remarkable resources and trade achievements of Cuba, and announcement was made at the Presidential Palace today that Cuba would be represented, and that an exhibit which details the $445,000,000 imports and exports of Cuba and the United States for the past year would be an important feature of the Council. In addition to the Cuban Government exhibit, the Pan-American Union will be represented, but Cuba is the only Latin-American nation to have an exhibit of its own.

Decision to pay this unusual recognition to the Cuban Government was prompted by two conditions. First, the attitude shown by President Menocal of Cuba in Cuba's war alliance and co-operation with the United States, and, second, because though one of the smallest Latin-American nations, Cuba, during the past five years, has assumed the lead among all the peoples of the Western Hemisphere in her foreign trade with the United States, surpassing by great and increasing margins such countries as Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Mexico. Think of it.

According to statistics compiled by the National Foreign Trade Council at its New York headquarters, by Secretary O. K. Davis, the volume of trade between Cuba and the United States reached a value of nearly $450,000,000 last year. This compares with only $196,000,000 in 1913, the year preceding the war. For 1918, the figures will be much higher, owing to President Menocal's voluntary co-operation with President Wilson and the United States Food Administration, by the terms of which Cuba's record sugar crop was placed unreservedly in the hands of the Allies, who likewise fixed the price at which the Cuban producers should dispose of it.

The Trade Council, which is a civic association of business men formed to extend the foreign trade of the United States and to hold it against Teutonic reprisals after the war, finds great satisfaction in the fact that for 1917 the United States took 75 per cent of the exports of Cuba, and is supplying 76 per cent of her imports. The value of sugar mill machinery alone sent from the United States to Cuba during 1917 was $11,000,000, an increase of $5,000,000 over the preceding year.

Sugar, tobacco, bananas, cocoa, tropical fruits, iron ore, manganese and cattle hides were the principal articles exported from Cuba, while the United States sent to this island such commodities as meats, lard, flour, corn, eggs, cheese, condensed milk, temperate zone fruits, coal and all classes of manufactures. Cotton goods alone bought from the United States by Cuba, totaled $10,000,000, and automobiles and parts made $5,000,000 more. Railway supplies worth $6,000,000 were imported and in the latter two items, the 1918 figures will show a tremendous increase.

Boots and shoes, structural iron and steel, pipes and fittings, paper and printing supplies and machinery, typewriters, sewing machines, agricultural implements, and many other commodities were sent from United States ports to Havana by the millions of dollars worth.

In addition to the close political and economic ties which bind the two neighboring republics, the co-operation displayed by President Menocal with United States government agencies, both official and unofficial, has done much to raise Cuba's foreign trade position to such eminence. The Cuban Government maintains close relations at all times with the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in Washington, the Bureau of Mines, the United States Geological Survey, the United States Food Administration, and such unofficial but efficient agencies as the National Foreign Trade Council. Development of Cuba's immense natural resources has only begun, but under such fortunate auspices as to insure for all time the position of leadership which she holds among Latin-American countries.

In charge of the Cuban exhibit as delegates from the Cuban Government at the National Foreign Trade Council will be J. V. Knight, Director of the Republic of Cuba News Bureau in New York, and Grafton W. Borgman, Consul of Cuba stationed in Cincinnati, and headquarters of the Cuban delegates will be at the Hotel Gibson for the week of the Council.

"The coming year presents many unusual problems which can be satisfactorily solved by each doing his best."

UP STATE RAMBLINGS

Jim Stubb, as he repriced the new list on Velvet from 10 to 12 cents the can.

"What's on with the L. & M. force, Jim?" inquired Sam Ash, assisting in the mark-up by sticking revised pasters on Royal Bengal little cigars from 18 to 20 cents for the red-and-gold packet.

"Oh, Camfield an' the entire crew working with Boss Watts were laid off a week because of factory strikes, over-sales, and so on. And then, just as they got ready to pack their grips for a new start, word came over the line to stay home another week! But they should worry an' catch a cold! Because, when Wednesday rolled 'round, there, in the mail, was the usual 'pay-to-bearer' check, just as though six days' business had been accomplished by wearin' out their Stetson shoes!"

"Now that you've mentioned the L. & M. trouble," remarked Sam, slipping the bull-tags under the tissue of each Durham bag, and stacking 'em on the shelf with the other six-cent favorites, "I wonder what Al Duker will do 'bout the loss of this brand, since the Government took it over from the A. T. Co.?"

"Sure, that's so!" exclaimed Jim, pickin' up a flutterin' slip which just dropped from the Durham carton. "Here it says 'Packed by machine No. 20, Thomas Johnson, inspector.' If the War Department has taken over the hull shootin' match, includin' 'Tom Johnson, inspector,' an' Al Duker, salesman, why then I guess neither the Johnsons, the Dukers, nor the wholesale an' retail firm of Stubb & Ash needn't worry further 'bout how much Bull Durham is made an' sold!"

"Right you are!" spoke up a cheerful voice from the door. And in came Charley Fox. "Yep, hereafter all your granulated tobacco troubles may be devoted to Duke's Mixture. That is the immediate Mix-of-the-Minute. It will soon become the international favorite of the ninety million mild men an' wild wimmen who remain in the grand old U. S. A. So, therefore an' howsumever, I'd advise the instant purchase of several great gross. What say you, gentlemen?"

"And there's one other little thing, too an' also. Our far-famed Chesterfield cigarette, for which I am about to place this sea-salt poster on yonder window, is now packed 16 for the dime. But, alas! it is authoritatively rumored that the size will soon be changed once again an' once more to 20 for 15 cents. So, here likewise, I would not urge, nay, I must insist, that you buy sufficient to meet the requirements of the many, many smokers who enjoy cigarettes which are mild, yet satisfy!"

"While talking on this cigarette subject," put in still another chap who'd just entered, "I'd like to say most of us dealers are already stocked to the sky on popular brands, merely to anticipate these expected changes." And Bert Thompson, of Thompson & Hare, Clinton Square retailers, Albany, continued:

"Yes, we've got an entire rear room filled with various cigarettes, representing quite a substantial inventory. Still, when opportunity offers, we accept any reasonable proposition showing a possible net on any standard brand. For I find most of our customers appear to prefer cigarettes that have been aged a trifle, especially those of the older stock, which smokers say are wrapped with superior paper. Yes, yes, we've certainly got the goods!"

"Well, then," entered Bill Lakin, who'd just arrived, "how about Blackstone and Totem cigars? No Waitt & Bond dealer can stock too many of these brands, always in daily demand. And, just to start somethin', how about this new Endicott label, our Spring an' Summer three-for-a-quarter style? It's named for our old Boston factory at 67 Endicott street. But our new shop, you know, is located at Columbus avenue and Tremont street. That cost $400,000, though our firm only figured to spend half of that when the plans were drawn. So, you see, we've got some plant there, and a fine firm behind the plant, too!"

THE SMOKER.

ANTICIPATING PROFITS

American Sumatra Tobacco Co. Will Pay Off $1,200,000 Notes—Directors' Meeting to Declare Dividends.

"Directors of American Sumatra Tobacco Co. are very confident that only a positive crop failure can prevent the company from realizing another big bulk of net profits from the 1918 crop. This crop will not be harvested until some months after the close of the current fiscal year, July 31, so that it will count in the results of the 1919 fiscal year," declares the Wall Street Journal.

"American Sumatra, despite the prospects of $40 a share profits for its 68,000 shares of common during the current fiscal year is making no plans for property enlargement. Its policy is to sit tight with what it has and build up its financial position. It would be easy enough with the surplus profits of this year to branch out and buy more Connecticut lands and produce a larger crop of shade grown tobacco in 1919. But the present policy is not to expand in these days of high cost construction and with labor no more abundant than it should be.

"The company will pay off during the next three months the last of its $1,200,000 note. It has no floating debt and it is felt that with working capital on hand July 31 next, it will not again be obliged to create any floating debt."

Directors meet for dividend action this week. It is not likely that the present $7 regular divident rate will be advanced. While an extra is not impossible, it is more likely that extras will be deferred until after the start of the new fiscal year when a better line can be had on the new crop.

Cincinnati Cigar Makers Threaten To Strike

Union Leaders Assert that 1,500 Workmen Will Go Out Monday if an Increase of a Dollar per Thousand Is Not Allowed—Retail Association Urging a General Advance—Cigar Output of First Ohio District Falls Off—Burley Market Quiet—Meyer Greenwald Re-enters the Tobacco Field.

CINCINNATI, April 6.—Unless cigar manufacturers of Cincinnati and adjacent territory grant the demand of cigar workers affiliated with Cigar Makers' Union No. 4 of this city for an increase in wages of $1 a thousand, by Monday, April 15, about 1,500 workmen will leave their benches and remain on strike until a settlement is effected. William F. Lemke, secretary of the local cigarmakers' union, stated to the representative of TOBACCO that "unless cigar manufacturers employing union men come to our terms by April 15, there will be a strike. We requested our International Union, Chicago, to give us permission to strike, but we have not had a reply. It may be the matter will be settled before the day set for the strike. We are demanding a general increase of $1 for each 1,000 cigars."

Local cigar manufacturers have made every possible effort to come to some amicable agreement with their workmen, who are said to be among the best paid cigar makers in the country, but to no avail. The union officials are holding out for their every demand, and unless something unforeseen develops between now and the day set for the general walk-out, the opposing forces will make no further effort to adjust their differences. It is reported that the Cincinnati cigar manufacturers have had several conferences with regard to the demands of their workers, and at these sessions it was the unanimous expression that the manufacturers would not grant the increase of $1 a thousand.

"At this time," said a prominent Cincinnati manufacturer to the correspondent for TOBACCO, "we have our files stacked with orders for spring and summer delivery, and all these orders have been booked on the basis of our present manufacturing cost. If we were to grant the wage increase demanded by our employes we would lose the $1 a thousand on all these orders. Of course, you can understand, we could not stand this loss now, with raw products up to the sky, Government taxes, and the hundred and one things faced by business men in these war times."

Other tradesmen, manufacturing, jobbing and retail, expressed themselves along these lines, and the general opinion in the trade here is that the workmen are now receiving all they are entitled to.

The Cincinnati Cigar and Tobacco Association has been considering for some time a general advance in the scale of retail prices. The imposition of the war taxes on tobacco products has placed an additional burden on the manufacturer, who for this reason and because of the steadily increasing cost of raw materials and labor, has been forced to make a considerable increase in his price to the jobber. A special meeting of the membership was held recently, and the assemblage expressed itself favorably to a general increase. A committee to go into the matter thoroughly and present recommendations for the consideration and action of the association was appointed by the president. One of the members of the committee, in discussing the matter with the TOBACCO correspondent, said: "Many popular brands of cigars, which formerly sold at a nickel, now go to the consumer at six cents, and retailers as a rule say there has been no apparent shrinkage in the demand. It is the general opinion of the trade that the so-called nickel cigar must eventually pass entirely if the dealer is to make a fair profit on the stock, which is costing him more constantly. It is agreed, however, that there must be concerted action and a definite scale of prices on standard goods, cigars, cigarettes or tobacco, if the movement for higher prices and a fair profit is to be successful."

The output of cigars in the First Ohio District during the month of March showed a falling off as compared with the corresponding month in 1917, and the first quarter likewise compared unfavorably with the preceding year. While the production for the nine months of the current fiscal year shows an increase over the corresponding period of the last fiscal year, the gain was made largely before the war taxes became effective.

Cincinnati cigar manufacturers for the most part report active conditions, and practically all of the factories seem to be busy. A great deal of difficulty with transportation facilities has been experienced, and some trouble has been had in obtaining sufficient quantities of raw leaf tobacco. However, it is believed that conditions will improve steadily, enabling the district to make a good showing before the year is up.

Extreme quiet prevailed in the local burley leaf tobacco market the past week, transactions being limited to the receipt of 4 hhds. at the Globe Warehouse. There were no offerings at auction, although it is said that resident buyers for the large manufacturing interests were eager for a sale, and, judging by the inquiry, the high prices which have been paid recently would have obtained on anything in old or new stock offered in good condition. The Tampa Editor Who Became a Cannoneer

Lots of People Have Reason to Appreciate Huffaker

TAMPA, April 7.—The jump from correspondent of TOBACCO at Tampa, and editorial writer of the Tampa Times, to a private in the United States Army, was taken last week by Frank L. Huffaker. Mr. Huffaker—or rather, Private Huffaker, as he is no longer in civilian life—is the second of Tampa's correspondents here to go into the service. R. Davis Hutchcraft, who handled the local interest of TOBACCO up to the middle of last September, was the first to go. Both were from the same paper, the Times, Mr. Hutchcraft being city hall and police reporter.

Huffaker's step was the more notable in that he is well beyond the draft age, being 36 years old, and was under no compulsion in any respect. As it was, as editor of the Times, he was doing a great deal to promote enlisting and to quicken the patriotic spirit of Florida readers of that paper, but he preferred active service to work in the editorial trenches. It is a fact that ever since the declaration of a state of war a year ago he has been trying to get into the service, endeavoring as far as he was able to get some place that would mean early assignment to duty in France.

Defective eyesight prevented his going into any of the officers' training camps, and also shut him off from the artillery and aviation service. It was characteristic of the man that without an opportunity to win a commission, he persisted and finally secured the waiver of physical standards so far as vision is concerned sufficiently for him to enlist as a private. At Jacksonville, where he reported for duty and was finally accepted, his ability as a newspaper man was seized upon and immediate assignment given to him to make the round of Florida towns as publicity man for the recruiting service.

Candidly, this was in a measure what Huffaker feared, as he wants to see the war, and to get into the midst of it, doing all he can, for the sake of French forefathers, for the Republic of France as well as the United States. He hopes before long to get orders to go "over there," and his friends, knowing his eagerness, are banking on his going before many months have passed.

His predecessor as TOBACCO's correspondent, Mr. Hutchcraft, is in the Officers' Training Camp, Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., and if news reaching Tampa by local men on furlough may be counted upon, is in a good way to emerge from the course with a lieutenant's commission. Huffaker is a single man, it may be remarked in passing, but Hutchcraft is married. On the eve of the departure of the selects on September 19, 1917, he slipped away from his fellows and took unto himself a bride, the daughter of Dr. L. S. Oppenheimer, one of the best known local physicians.

It is worthy of mention, perhaps, that of the Times editorial force as composed when war was declared, only the married men remain. This leaves two men in the office, with a first lieutenant, two sergeants now in officers' training camps, one private in an aero squadron and Private Huffaker to the credit of the Times.

CINCINNATI NOTES

stocks in manufacturers' hands are lower than they are willing to admit, experienced tobacco men believe that the crest of high prices has about been reached and that only occasional rises in value will transpire.

Meyer Greenwald, who more than 15 years ago retired from the firm of Greenwald Bros., then engaged in the manufacture of cigars and leaf tobacco business, has just returned to this city from Parkersburg, W. Va., to re-enter the tobacco field. He has formed a partnership with his brother, Samuel, now located at 25 West Twelfth street, doing business as the Quality Cigar Factory.

They have increased their capital $100,000, rented a warehouse in Miamisburg, Ohio, and intend to go into the leaf tobacco market extensively, packing about 2,000 cases of Ohio 1917 leaf tobacco, in addition to the manufacture of cigars.

Bugbee & Brown, wholesale and retail tobacco dealers, have acquired the three-story building recently occupied by Victor Beaudette at 28 and 30 Washington street, Biddeford, Me. After making desired improvements, Bugbee & Brown will move into their new building. The transfer of this important firm from Main street to Washington street has given real estate men something to talk about in Biddeford, because "when the postoffice was built on the southeast side of Washington street it was freely predicted that considerable improvements would be made on the opposite side of the street, between Main and Jefferson."

The Wellington is made of genuine French Briar, seasoned by our own special process. It breaks-in sweet and mellow. The bowl is guaranteed against cracking or burning through. The "well" catches the moisture as well as all stray crumbs of tobacco. Any tobacco tastes better in a Wellington.

W. D. C. Advertising Campaign 1917-1918

W. D. C. advertisements are now appearing in "The Saturday Evening Post," "Literary Digest," "Collier's Weekly," Railroad Men's Magazine," "Country Gentleman," "Hoard's Dairyman," "Breeder's Gazette," "Army and Navy Journal," and in many college publications.

The campaign will run for nine whole months. Generous space is being used in all mediums—all half pages and quarter pages. More than four million people will read these W. D. C. advertisements in the magazines alone.

Another big Wellington advertising campaign is now running in the Canadian newspapers.

The pipes of all nations are introduced and illustrated in the magazine advertisements—the Peace Pipe of the Indian—the Hooka of the Turk—the old Church Warden of the pioneers—the Whalebone of the Esquimaux, etc.

Watch for these W.D.C. Wellington advertisements in the magazines—cut them out and paste them in your windows.

Go over your stock and see that you have a full line of W. D. C. pipes—feature the Wellington in your counter displays—cash in on this big country-covering W. D. C. advertising campaign.

ALL HELP TO PAY

WASHINGTON, April 10.—War taxes took from the pockets of the American people $56,076,000 in February, or $251,890,000 in the eight months since last July 1. These figures, reported to-day by the Internal Revenue Bureau, are the tax increases for those periods over the same periods of the year previous, and represent substantially the result of heavier war levies.

Total internal revenue collections in February were $89,130,000, and since July 1, 1917, $549,962,000. This is only one-seventh of the $3,400,000,000 total expected from tax sources, mainly income and excess profits taxes, before next July 1.

That many persons paid their income tax assessments four months before they were due is indicated by collections of $12,029,000 from this source in February. Corporation income and excess profits tax collections were $6,373,000.

Considerable information on the volume of business in freight, passenger, express, theatre, automobile, telephone and telegraph, and other lines of commerce is disclosed by itemized figures on tax receipts from these sources contained in the report.

Freight tax collections of $4,625,000, representing 8 per cent. of freight payments, indicate that $154,173,000 worth of hauling business was done by the railroads. Most of this probably was for January, as reports on collections were several weeks late.

The month's passenger fare bill of the nation apparently was $55,820,000, for aggregate collections from the 8 per cent tax on the cost of passenger tickets were $4,465,000. The Pullman fares paid by travelers must have been $4,468,000, since the 10 per cent tax brought in $446,800. Express taxes, 5 per cent of the payment, were $767,000, indicating that the amount of business done was $15,355,000. From the tax of 5 cents on each telephone or telegraph message of 15 cents or more $1,063,000 was raised, indicating that 21,275,000 messages were despatched.

The nation's theatre and amusement bill for the month appears to be $37,083,000, as $3,708,300 was collected from the 10 per cent tax. It also is indicated that the American people spend $3,659,000 for club dues every month and pay 10 per cent of this as government tax.

Apparently people are not buying as many decks of playing cards now as a year ago, for the revenue figures show that tax was collected only on 1,788,000 decks in the month, as compared with 2,896,000 in February, 1917. Revenue was greater, however, owing to the raising of the federal tax from 2 to 5 cents a deck.

The tax of 3 per cent on the sales price of automobiles and motor cycles yielded $2,320,000, indicating that tax was paid on $77,352,000 sales.

I want to dodge
  This life complex,
This hodge and podge
  Of "soul" and "sex."
The troubled thought
  Strives to be free
From this distraught,

What is the thing,
  This stirring force?
Can it be spring?
  Of course!

Shortage of Smoking Tobacco in St. Louis

Trade Regrets Inability to Get More Bull Durham and Duke's Mixture—Vice-President Harms of Peter Hauptmann Tobacco Co. Explains the Situation—Banquet to Liberty Loan Sales Organization at Hotel Statler—Hake Has a Match that T. Wright Made—Kelly's Bouquet Exhales Success—Western Division of National Wholesale Druggists' Association Meets on April 25.

ST. LOUIS, April 4.—An item sent out by the Associated Press and published in daily papers here under date of April 3, that the Government had taken over the entire output of "Bull Durham" tobacco, manufactured by the American Tobacco Co., and given in further detail in TOBACCO of April 4, received here today, was read with intense interest by the trade in St. Louis. For some time there has been a shortage not only of Bull Durham but also of Duke's Mixture and of other granulated tobaccos. With the supply entirely cut off, it will be only a question of a few days when there will be no more Bull to roll in St. Louis.

"The situation here has been very serious for some time," said A. E. Harms, vice-president of the Peter Hauptmann Tobacco Co., largest distributor of these tobaccos in St. Louis. "Our stocks have been very low, and shipments have not been coming through in quantities large enough to meet the demand, which has been something tremendous. We have been anticipating this move of the Government in cutting off the supply altogether, and for the last four weeks our dealers have been put on rations, as it were. So that we could take care of all of our trade to the best of our ability, we have been selling not more than three dozen packages to any one person. We have thus tried to make our supply go around.

"At present the stocks in St. Louis amount to less than 100 cases in hands of jobbers, while retailers have very little. We usually have on hand about 1,000 cases. The situation as to Duke's Mixture and other granulated tobaccos is about as bad, and I have heard also that the Duke output also will be taken over by the Government."

Salesmen for wholesale cigar establishments in St. Louis were among the seven hundred Liberty Loan salesmen who were guests at a banquet given by the Liberty Loan Organization of the Eighth Federal Reserve District at Hotel Statler last night. Many cigar salesmen will devote most of their time within the next four weeks to selling bonds, once more showing the patriotism of the trade. The Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. is one of a number of concerns in St. Louis who are paying for page advertisements in the daily papers for the loan.

Harrison L. Hake is now conducting the retail store at Third and Olive streets, which for many years was operated by T. Wright & Co., with which concern he had been connected for the last sixteen years. The Wright concern, which began business there in 1866, is now being liquidated. The name of the new concern is the H. L. Hake Cigar Co. The store is located in the center of a big wholesale and raw-fur distributing district, and always has been a busy one. Mr. Hake will handle a great variety of brands, but will feature several private brands, such as Hake's Hand-made and Ha-Ko. One of the relics which will remain in the possession of the new proprietor is the wooden match made by T. Wright, founder of the business, who is several times a millionaire.

All of the old Wright employes have now been located with other concerns. George A. Witte, secretary of the company, is with the Third National Bank; Frank Marsh is with Stanley's; Cootch Jones, with Meyer Brothers Drug Co.; Ed Dillon, Moss & Lowenhaupt; Ferd Bartels, Parker-Gordon Cigar Co., and Henry Diefenbach, Judge & Dolph. Walter Wright is still engaged in closing up the business affairs of the company.

C. L. Grant has been appointed manager for the cigar department for Judge & Dolph Drug Co., and will have charge of their four retail stores. He succeeds Charles Taylor, who resigned several months ago. Mr. Grant has been with Judge & Dolph for the last six years, and is well known to the trade in St. Louis. The promotion is generally regarded as well deserved.

Sig. Baehr, who has been in charge of the cigar department of the Enderle drug store at Grand avenue and Olive street, is now with the Wolff-Wilson Drug Co.

George W. Duncan, who travels in Northern Missouri and Western Illinois for the Parker-Gordon Cigar Co., was a recent visitor to St. Louis.

Leon Davidson, formerly with the cigar department of the Wolff-Wilson Drug Co., has left that concern to take charge of the department for the Johnson Bros. Drug Co.

Net sales for the St. Louis branch of the Parker-Gordon Cigar Co. for March were the largest in the history of the branch, which was established seven years ago. I. H. Gilley is the manager of the St. Louis store.

F. E. Johnson, vice-president of the Havana-American Tobacco Co., will be in St. Louis Tuesday to confer with E. P. Humes, of that company, who has been conducting a big campaign for Kelly's Bouquet. All sorts of novel advertising stunts have been tried,

Patriotism Means More Than City Pride

Cuesta's Speech Puts Tampa in a Better Light

TAMPA, April 7.—The impassioned declaration by A. L. Cuesta, of the Cuesta-Rey Co., that if the government wants the Tampa Bay hotel for a convalescent hospital, the citizens of Tampa should say, "Take it," has found many supporters throughout the city. Since the meeting a week ago at which Lieut. Charles Gans of the surgeon general's office discussed the matter with members of the board of trade and board of public works, a petition has been circulated and now has more than 1,000 signers, asking that a meeting be called and the question reconsidered.

It is not argued that bringing a hospital here would be of benefit to the city. But a patriotic wave that has swept the city insists that the hotel, fireproof and with beautiful and spacious grounds about it, should be turned over to the government by the lessees regardless of any injury which Tampa might sustain. That was the view Mr. Cuesta expressed, in forceful words, at the meeting with Lieut. Gans.

Feelingly he declared on that occasion that although he was not American born, he was ready, if need be, to give all that he possesses to help win the war. Mr. Cuesta was in the minority at that meeting, which included men who thought it would be far wiser for citizens of Tampa to go down in their pockets and build a suitable hospital building for the government than to take a course which they regarded as spelling the ruination of the city's property for use after the war as a tourist hotel.

Just at present the matter is dormant, the Liberty day celebration and opening of the third Liberty loan campaign taking precedence. But it is likely the petition will be presented in a few days to T. Ed. Bryan, the newly elected president of the Tampa Board of Trade. Mr. Bryan was elected without opposition, all agreeing that he was the logical man to head the organization. During the year now drawing to a close he has headed the cigar manufacturers' bureau of the board, and as its chairman has been a great factor in keeping peace within the industry, among the several factions as well as between workmen and employers.

RIESER DELEGATED

Big Chicago Wholesaler Will Serve as T. M. A. Delegate at National Chamber of Commerce Meeting.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States will hold its sixth annual meeting at the Auditorium in Chicago, April 10, 11 and 12.

Herman Rieser, president of J. & B. Moos, Chicago, will act as the T. M. A. delegate.

Charles Dushkind, secretary and counsel of the Association, had planned to be in attendance with Mr. Rieser, but work in connection with the Third Liberty Loan drive in the Tobacco trade, makes it impossible for Dushkind to go to Chicago at this time.

The meeting will be an important one, in view of the developments of the past six months.

As this meeting falls in the opening week of the Liberty Loan campaign, some concern was expressed as to whether or not it should be postponed, and, to definitely settle the question, Joseph H. Drefrees, vice president of the United States Chamber of Commerce addressed an inquiry to the Secretary of the Treasury, which evoked the following reply:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

WASHINGTON

March 30, 1918.

My Dear Mr. Drefrees:

I have your letter of the 27th of March, and in reply permit me to say that I see no reason whatever for considering the question of postponing the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States because it happens to fall in the first week of the Liberty Loan Campaign. On the contrary, I feel that the meeting may be very helpful to the campaign, and afford a means of reaching many business men of the country with the message of the government. I was glad to speak to Mr. Hamlin with regard to the invitation which you have extended to him to attend the meeting and he tells me he will accept with a great deal of pleasure.

Cordially yours,
(Signed) WM. G. MCADOO.

Louis Friedman, who was located for many years at 510 North Sixth street, is now greeting his friends at his new location, 424 North Sixth street, across the street from the Columbia Theatre.

Frank B. Coleman, an attorney, has been appointed trustee for The Schottmueller Exposition Cigar Co., which went into bankruptcy several weeks ago. His bond has been fixed at $1,000. This is one of the oldest concerns in St. Louis.

The annual convention of the Western Division of the National Wholesale Druggists will be held in St. Louis, April 25 and 26. Elaborate plans are being made for the convention, at which trade conditions will be the feature of the discussions.

Admitting an Insatiable Demand for Cigars

Eager Buyers on the Pacific Coast—Distributors Can't Supply Goods as Fast as Wanted—Prohibition at Vallejo Results in the Starting of Six New Stores—Some Retailers Charge Ten Cents Each for Cigars Costing $42.50 per Thousand—Eddie Allenberg Had Appendicitis—A Steadily Developing Trade in Manilas—Supplying the Alaskan Fishing Fleet.

San Francisco, April 3.—In the market wherein cigars and tobacco are passed from the wholesaler to the dealer, and in the case of leaf tobacco from the distributor to the cigar manufacturer, it is more a case of buying than selling. The retailer in passing his goods on to the consumer must exercise some salesmanship, as the public still is somewhat skeptical concerning necessity for increased prices, but the dealers and the cigar manufacturers have their eyes wide open and are buying freely, and in many cases demanding to buy more than the distributors are able to let them have. These statements are true of the entire West, according to men who have recently traveled through this territory. For example, Phil Conradi, Jr., of Phil Conradi & Son, has just returned from a long trip throughout the entire Northwest. He deals with cigar manufacturers exclusively and says that 95 per cent of those whom he visited told him to look over their stock and then enter an order for what he thought they would need for the rest of the year. Charles H. Knubel (Charles the Great), who covered his territory from the Focky Mountains West, before returning from his recent trip East, found the same condition among the dealers whom he visited. In nearly every case they were anxious to buy in excess of what he could deliver. In this city the larger distributors—Ehrman Bros. & Co., M. A. Gunst and H. L. Judell & Co.—report that their salesmen are selling more cigars than they can deliver at the present time. The demand seems insatiable. While the retailers have to work harder to pass the goods along to the ultimate consumer, they all seem prosperous, and their very anxiety to buy more stock is good evidence that the people of the Coast have not foresworn their favorite smoke. Wherever soldiers or sailors are gathered a good field has been developed. Recently the town of Vallejo, near the Mare Island Navy Yard, went dry, and at the same time the prohibition which kept the sailors from Vallejo was abandoned. With this change cigar stores at once began to spring up, and it is reported that six new stores have been opened in that one town in the past two weeks. With the distributors prosperous the retailers cannot be suffering, and all the distributors are more than satisfied with business. Ehrman Bros. & Co. report that their sales are better than ever. Judell says that with the Fighting Bob as a leader his business shows a marked increase, and so do all along the line.

The distributors have recently been made happy by large orders given to outfit the fleet of fishing vessels which start for the Alaskan waters in a few days. Most of these orders were placed through Frank B. Peterson, a wholesale grocer, who has interests in Alaskan packing plants.

The statement is made by some of the traveling men who have recently covered the western territory that there are certain communities which have not taken kindly to the six-cent proposition, and are charging ten cents for goods costing $42.50 and thereabouts. It is asserted that these retailers are liable to feel the heavy hand of Uncle Sam, for they are profiteering by selling goods beyond the seven-cent mark which has paid an internal revenue tax only on the supposition that they should not be sold for more than seven cents. According to this information, these dealers are cheating the Government out of $2 a thousand, and that sooner or later "their sin will find them out."

Bauer Hess, of Ehrman Bros. & Co., is covering the territory in Nevada with H. A. Soloman in the interest of the Napacuba. They report that the goods are going in great style.

Harry Green, Inc., received 64 cases of Manila cigars and 354 bales of Manila tobacco on the steamer Ecuador, which arrived March 30. Mr. Green, who has been in Manila for the past three months, is expected back here on April 17.

All the cigar men of the city are taking a keen interest in the new Liberty Loan. Among the retailers the campaign will be handled by Bob Donahoe, president of the Retail Cigar Dealers' Association; Dan Dwyer, secretary, and Irving I. Pollack, of the board of directors.

W. A. Frutiger, assistant to H. Loewenstein, of the local branch of the Lorillard Co., has been transferred from San Francisco to the headquarters at Detroit.

There is a great scarcity of Gato cigars in this city, and Bull Durham is also hard to get, notwithstanding the recent increase in its price.

The Union Leader in the 5-cent tin-foil package has been withdrawn from the market. The 10-cent size in tin foil is a new form which is proving a success.

Sam Israel, wholesaler, has found business so lively that he has just added R. Hackett to his bookkeeping force.

Virtually Two Cabinets

WASHINGTON, April 8.—The Nation's war-making agencies have achieved a close harmony of action in the last two weeks through the Wednesday conferences at the White House which high officials said today has speeded the prosecution of the fight for democracy to the point of greatest efficiency yet reached.

The President now virtually has two Cabinets, the first of which advises him on diplomatic and political questions, while the second discusses with the Chief Executive the problems of mobilizing the industrial powers of the Nation, without which there could be no war. The Cabinet proper meets every Friday. The "War Cabinet," or "Industrial Cabinet," as it is coming to be known, gathers at the White House every Wednesday. It comprises the Director General of Railroads, the Chairmen of the Shipping, War Industries and War Trade Boards, the Food Administrator and the Fuel Administrator.

The War Cabinet at no time has touched on political questions. All of the War Cabinet's work has been to further the preparation of America to throw her entire resources into the scale against the Germans. So important has this work become that the prosecution of the war, except for direction of actual military and naval movements, now is entrusted to the little group of six men, representing the factors necessary to provide the fighting men with all they need to bring victory as quickly as possible.

Edward R. Stettinius, Second Assistant Secretary of War, in charge of all industrial and commercial aspects of the department, may be added to the Wednesday conferences because of the close connection of his work with that of Mr. Baruch of the War Industries Board, and the other member of the War Cabinet. Mr. Stettinius is regarded as a virtual Director of Munitions.

First results of the War Cabinet's work have become apparent in the decision of the War Industries Board to give preference in delivery to 100 per cent requirements of shipyards for steel.

Altogether the result of the War Cabinet's work was described to-day by one of its members as having been to enable all of them to "keep step."

CONGRESS PASSES THE WEBB BILL.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—The Webb export bill has finally, after several years, been passed by both Houses of Congress, and will probably, within the next day or so, be signed by the President.

Under the bill as finally passed, exporters are prohibited from acts, in their foreign combinations, intentionally enhancing or depressing prices in the United States.

Exporters' associations are made subject to strict supervision of the Federal Trade Commission, which is given power to prosecute those guilty of unfair practices.

As is so well known, the purpose of the bill is to allow American exporters to form combinations in extending their foreign trade.

DRAWBACK FOR HAVANA-AMERICAN CO.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—The Treasury Department has announced the allowance of a drawback on cigars manufactured by the American Cigar Co., at the Havana-American branch in New York City, in whole or in part with imported tobacco.

WISCONSIN NOTES

EDGERTON, Wis., April 5.—The end of the deliveries of the 1917 tobacco crop is almost in sight now. A few straggling lots are coming to the receiving points every day, but the coming week will see the most of the crop in and settled for. Most of the larger operators have enough stock on hand to keep their sorting rooms running for several weeks yet.

The work of steaming the beds preparatory to sowing the seed for another crop is under way, but the weather conditions will determine largely the time the seed will be sown. It is generally believed it is yet too early for the sowing of sprouted seed, which is usually delayed until after freezing weather.

It is becoming more easier to secure shipments out of storage to Eastern factory points. —Edgerton Reporter.

The Mi Carmen Cigar Co. in Milwaukee recently took a notable step toward strictly sanitary cigar manufacture. Officials have delegated a physician to inspect periodically for symptoms of contagious diseases every one of the employes. In the event of disease being discovered, the superintendent is immediately communicated with and the affected employe receives medical attention at once, and is not permitted to work until he is completely cured.

William M. Collins, president of the Philip Henrici Co., proprietor of the restaurant known as "Henrici's," on Randolph street, Chicago, has concluded arrangements for a ninety-nine years' lease of the site, commencing May 1, 1925, at an aggregate rental of $2,425,000, or $20,000 per year for the first ten years, and $25,000 per year thereafter. The period intervening between the present time and the commencement of the new lease is covered by a short term lease. It is understood that Mr. Collins will erect on the site a new building costing between $250,000 and $300,000.

Kenneth Baillie, of the I. Lewis Cigar Mfg. Co., is back from his Northern California and Oregon trip, which he made with Henry Loverich. He reports the trade and the smokers to be gradually working towards the six cent idea. Some dealers, however, who have good-sized stocks of standard brands, are continuing to sell at old prices. But this can't last forever. Meanwhile S. Bachman & Co. have received their first shipment of the new Lewis 10 cent cigar, the Melba. Mr. Baillie will put in some time working the city trade on this line.—San Francisco Grocer.

The Ehrlich Manufacturing Co. has discontinued making cigars in New York City, and from now on will manufacture all its goods in Tampa. This shift in the producing end is not the result of any labor trouble, but owing to friction with the building department of New York City. Since 1916, Mr. Ehrlich has been having trouble with the building department, and from time to time has made changes in his factory in accordance with its suggestions. Rather than meet new demands of the department, which would involve a big expense, the company decided to manufacture cigars in Tampa and keep his place on West Broadway as a New York office.

According to the L'Economiste European, the scarcity of tobacco has been severely felt in Germany. Importations, which have been placed under Government supervision, have greatly diminished. Home production plays only a minor role, as an extension of the acreage devoted to tobacco has been prohibited. Tobacco factories, which have been already strictly rationed, receive only 60 per cent. of the raw product of two years ago, and as three-quarters of their output has been reserved for the army, the country has only 15 per cent. of its consumption in peace times.

D. J. Mahoney has been sending in plenty of orders, Park & Tilford, from the upper part of New York. Irvin Studwell has been kept busy seeing that they were filled with the least possible delay. Roman Dobler has gone back to Chicago and is devoting this week to stirring up things in the windy city. M. M. Harrison is covering Long Island and will take in Westchester next week. The firm has just given Harrison a Reo Runabout to enable him to cover ground at top speed. And Harrison has been piling in orders for Mi Favorita and Telegrafo. M. Prevost has been producing excellent results among the clubs and hotels. His sales for March were unusually large. Business is booming with Park & Tilford's cigar department.

War has forced the transportation problem into the foreground. Only one thing will lighten the pressure on railroad and express companies, and that is to make the short hauls of freight a highway proposition. Motor trucks can easily handle short hauls, and have proven, where dependable roads are available, that they can carry freight and express in successful competition with the railroads. Everywhere companies are being organized to engage in intercity hauling of freight, but they can be successful only under proper road conditions. Several projects of this kind have recently been compelled to discontinue activities when the question "where are the roads" confronted them.—The Nation's Business.

Louie J. Falone's cigar store and pool room in the Arcade, Charleston, W. Va., was purchased last week by C. F. Zimmerman for $15,000 from W. A. Cracraft, administrator of the Falone estate. The new owner also obtained a new lease on the building for an additional five years. Fred Scott will continue as general manager of the store, and all the other clerks will be retained. Mr. Zimmerman is a young business man and well known in Charleston. He is a part owner of the Realty Extension Co., with offices in the Day and Night Bank Building. He is also owner of the New Beckley Hotel at New Beckley, West Va., and part owner of the cigar store, barber shop and pool room of Zimmerman & Beckner, at 711 State street, Charleston. Several thousand dollars' worth of stock will be added to the store and improvements will be made soon.

AMERICAN CASTOR OIL

nized 1,035,000 bushels, and in 1917 1,041,000 bushels. Meantime the countries of Europe recognizing the importance of this lubricant for the flying machines used in the war, intensified their demand upon India. Germany doubled her imports of castor beans and castor oil in 1913 and the first half of 1914, and the total exports of castor oil from India jumped from 898,000 gallons in 1914-15 to 1,723,000 gallons in 1916-17, while the quantity of castor beans exported from that country also showed a slight increase in the same period. No figures are available as to the actual quantity of castor oil produced in India. This exportation from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 gallons of the oil from India form a comparatively small proportion of the product, since it is still used in that country as a burning oil for lamps also as a lubricant and in the manufacture of leather. The chief exports of the oil and beans from India prior to the war were to Great Britain, United States, France and Germany. At present the entire available supply of both seed and oil go to Great Britian and her Allies.

Other countries which have developed the production of this oil are China, Indo-China, Java, South Africa, the United States and certain countries of South America, especially Brazil where it grows rapidly wherever introduced, having been before the war looked upon as "undesirable" and its growth discouraged. Now agriculturists in every part of Brazil are increasing their product as rapidly as possible, and this is true of the other castor bean producing countries.

In the United States the Department of Agriculture and the War Department are combining to stimulate the production of the castor bean. The War Department is pushing the movement for a great increase in the production of the castor bean in the Southern States, in the hope that 200,000 acres may be planted in castor beans in the present year, and to accomplish this it has contracted with certain individuals for castor beans at $3.50 per bushel, permitting them to guarantee to the growers or sub-contractors $3.00 per bushel f. o. b. at the nearest local weighing and forwarding center, and the South is now being canvassed with the hope of inducing farmers to devote the necessary area to the production of this requirement of our flying machines and those of our Allies, and increasing the annual output of our factories from less than $2,000,000 a year to $10,000,000 or perhaps $20,000,000 annually. It is hoped that the efforts now in progress will result in a crop aggregating in value about $12,000,000 and this when transformed into the finished product will probably approximate $20,000,000. The plant, while a perennial in the tropics is an annual in the temperate zone, and the product of the planting now in progress in the Southern States will become available to the factories before the end of the current year.

congestion. The result has been, in the opinion of officials, to achieve the speed of a pooling arrangement without the complications of a formal pooling of ships.

Conditions which existed before the ship control committee, composed of P. A. S. Franklin, H. H. Raymond and Sir Cunnop Guthrie, took charge, have hampered their work to some extent, but gradually are being remedied, leading to the belief that future improvement in the handling of ships will be even more rapid than in the first two months. Diversion of tonnage from congested Eastern ports to Southern ports is being developed satisfactorily.

Large quantities of cotton were shipped into New York for export last winter, so that money could be borrowed on the bills of lading, and much of the staple still remains in warehouse space needed for other goods.

ration; it was longing. To learn how big a dollar is one may measure it in cents, and it is always worth one hundred cents. Or one may measure it in wheat, and at one time it will be as big as a bushel of wheat and at another time only as big as a half bushel of wheat. Another way is to measure it in gold, and that is the Government way—a dollar is worth so many grams of gold. Or, you can take a silver dollar and measure its diameter with a ruler. I don't happen to have a silver dollar, but I have a paper one, and I have just measured it. It seems to be seven and five-eighths inches long, three and three-sixteenths inches broad, and as thick as a sheet of paper. That is one way of measuring a dollar. Another way is to measure what a dollar, with ninety-nine of its fellows, will do when invested in a Liberty Bond.

What the Courts Have Said

About Efforts to Confine Trade

(Copyright, 1918 by Elton J. Buckley.)

The following letter, just received from a retail merchant in Illinois, is of interest, though obviously name and address must be suppressed:

————, Ill.

. . . The ——— retailers of this section are very hard pressed just now by jobbers' competition. A large percentage of the whole sale dealers of ——— and ———, which supply our territory, will solicit our trade and at the same time the trade of large consumers, which rightfully belongs to the retailer. We have pleaded with them and even threatened them through our organization, but with very little effect. Some of them stop for a time, but they get back as soon as they think we are not looking. We also have manufacturers' competition in a few cases, and have not been able to do anything about that, either. Also three mail order houses.

Our association is convinced that there must be some legal way to preserve the old lines of trade by making manufacturers and jobbers shinny on their own side, and sell their own customers and let ours alone. We are also against the mail order house, and believe there is some legal way to get back at the people that are selling them their goods. We believe from what we have seen of your writings on legal subjects that you may be able to put us where we can accomplish something. Anything you may write us will be greatly appreciated by all of our members.

L. F. O.,
Secretary ————.

I regret that I cannot say anything to this correspondent which will help him in the slightest degree. No one can, at least no one can help him do what he wishes to do. I can half help him by telling him that it is now an illegal and dangerous thing for merchants of any rank, for instance retailers in any line, to attempt to sew up their natural field of customers so as to keep out merchants of another rank, such as jobbers. It is also illegal and dangerous to attempt to keep manufacturers from selling to mail order houses, or to threaten to impose, or actually impose, in any systematic, organized way, a penalty, such as blacklist or boycott, upon manufacturers who do sell mail order houses, or upon jobbers who sell consumers.

In the very same mail which brought this letter came the official report of a case which has just been decided by a United States Court for a western district. The facts of the case are practically identical with the situation outlined by the above correspondent, and the law laid down is therefore directly applicable.

The case I refer to hinged upon the efforts of a combination of lumber retailers to (1) keep wholesale dealers from selling consumers; (2) keep manufacturers from selling mail order houses, and (3) force consumers to buy of the retailers nearest them. To accomplish these purposes, a very elaborate system had been built up which was extremely successful, to judge from the following description of it by the president of the association: "We are today acting in unison with fifteen other retail associations representing 5,000 yards, making with our own a total of 7,200 yards, covering territory extending from the western slope of the Alleghenies on the east to the eastern slope of the Rockies on the west, and from Winnipeg down to the 'Sunny South by the Sea.' In this vast territory it is estimated that of all the lumber used in the building trades, 94 per cent of it is confined to its proper channels, reaching the consumer through the retail yards."

This scheme was based on a contention with which a large number of merchants in all lines agree, viz., that the manufacturers' only legitimate customer is the jobber, the jobber's the retailer and the retailer's the consumer. Also, that the mail order house is nothing more than a poacher, that it should not be permitted to intrude into everybody's territory to compete with established retailers, and that manufacturers who sell mail order houses are unfriendly to the trade.

The lumber retailers built up a strong and careful scheme to carry out this contention, the essential part of whic was the periodical publication in various ways, of the names of wholesalers who sold consumers, the names of retailers who went into other retailers' territory, and the names of manufacturers who sold mail order houses. This was so the fair retailers could boycott the unfair jobbers who sold consumers; so the fair jobbers could refuse to sell the unfair retailers who sold other retailers' customers, and so the whole trade could boycott the unfair manufacturers who sold mail order houses. Naturally the same thing applied when the manufacturer sold consumers, as he occasionally did.

There was only one thing wrong with this scheme—it was unlawful. Its success was so conspicuous that the Government prosecuted everybody connected with it in this western district for violating the anti-trust laws, and after the court saw the boycott notices and the blacklists the whole beautiful scheme crumbled and fell. The court granted an injunction against every person connected with it, on the ground that "the circulation of these reports not only tends to directly restrain the freedom of commerce by preventing the listed wholeale dealers from entering into competition with retailers, but directly tends to prevent other retailers who have no personal grievance against listed jobbers and who might trade with them, from so doing, they being deterred solely because of the influence of the report circulated among the members of the association."

When the court got through with this beautiful and most effective plan there was nothing left of it, and there will never be anything to it again. From this time on, a manufacturer, jobber or retailer may sell jobbers, retailers, consumers or mail order houses, any or all, and nobody who considers himself aggrieved can do anything about it except stop buying himself from the man he thinks has offended. The minute he tries to get his fellow-merchant to join him, which is the only way such a thing could become effective, he will run into the law. Henceforth there are no lines between the different branches of the trade which cannot be obliterated at the will of anybody.

EXCESS TAX REVIEWERS.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—Excess profits tax returns will be examined and the taxes assessed with the assistance of a group of tax reviewers appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of Secretary McAdoo. The men who will serve in this group of tax reviewers are:

T. S. Adams, economist, of Yale University, chairman.

J. E. Sterrett, accountant, New York City.

Stuart W. Cramer, of the National Council of Cotton Manufacturers, Charlotte, N. C.

E. T. Meredith, publisher, "Successful Farming," Des Moines, Iowa.

Wm. N. Davis, engineer and oil expert, Bartlesville, Okla.

Thos. E. Lyons, member of Wisconsin State Tax Commission, Madison, Wis.

R. C. Allen, State Geologist, Lansing, Mich.

Ralph Arnold, geologist and petroleum engineer, Los Angeles, Cal.

John Marks, lawyer and sugar planter, Napoleonville, La.

A. P. Ramstedt, mining, smelting and refining, Wallace, Idaho.

George M. Cornwall, lumber expert and editor of "The Timberman," Portland, Ore.

Carl H. Nau, accountant, Cleveland, Ohio.

H. H. Bond, Massachusetts Income Tax Deputy, Boston, Mass.

L. F. Speer, Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Several of these reviewers served as excess profits advisers and rendered valuable assistance in constructing the regulations for the administrations of the excess profits taxes, while the other reviewers are business or accounting experts of large experience.

The legal questions arising in connection with the work of the reviewers will be referred to Arthur A. Ballantine, solicitor of Internal Revenue, and special attorneys of the Department, among whom are Fred T. Field, Hugh Satterlee and Robert N. Miller.

"The appointment of these reviewers," said Commissioner Roper today, "insures the continuation of co-operation between the Bureau of Internal Revenue and taxpayers. This plan will safeguard governmental revenues and accord equitable treatment to taxpayers."

DAYLIGHT AND CHILD LABOR.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—Miss Julia Lathrop, head of the Children's Bureau, says relative to the new daylight saving law and its connection with the Child Labor Law:

"Your letter requesting information concerning the law changing the present standard time so far as it may affect the application of the Child Labor Law, has been received. The Act of Congress provides that, for the purpose of establishing the standard time of the United States, the territory of continental United States shall be divided into five zones. Section 2 of this Act reads in part as follows:

"In all statutes . . . relating to the time . . . within which any act shall or shall not be performed by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, it shall be understood and intended that the time shall be the United States standard time of the zone within which the act is to be performed.'

"It is obvious from the language that the standard of hours relating to the employment of children as provided by Section I of the United States Child Labor Act, must be determined in accordance with the provisions of the Act to save daylight and provide standard time for the United States; that is to say, for the purpose of enforcing the Child Labor Law the hours of 6 o'clock antemeridian and 7 o'clock postmeridian of the standard during the period commencing the last Sunday in March of each year and ending on the last Sunday in October of each year, are equivalent to the hours of 6 o'clock antemeridian and 7 o'clock postmeridian, respectively, as prescribed in Section I of the Child Labor Law."

HARD FOR THE CIDER SELLER.

"Sweet cider is not a liquor, but hard cider, or cider that has commenced to ferment, is a liquor within the meaning and intent of the law."

Therefore, decided the Appellate Division of New York, the Court of Special Sessions was right in convicting Peter Palluch of No. 919 Melrose Avenue, Bronx, of selling liquor without a license because he had given two patrolmen hard cider at so much a gulp. The cider was found to contain 6 3/10 per cent. of alcohol.

FOREIGN TRADE CONVENTION.

One of the interesting facts in connection with the organization of the Fifth National Foreign Trade Convention, which will be held at the Gibson Hotel, Cincinnati, April 18, 19 and 20, will be the further organization this year of the group sessions idea, with a view to having as many subjects handled by the case method as possible. By this group session method it is planned to make further use of the practical and personal experience of participants in foreign trade, and also to interest a larger number of the smaller manufacturers in the opportunity for foreign trade.

Another special feature in connection with the convention will be the greater use of the volunteer trade advisers and of the Government representatives. There will be a special committee in charge of the work of the Government and volunteer trade advisers, who will be available for consultation during the period of the convention.

The theme of the convention is "The Part of Foreign Trade in Winning the War," and the program as announced gives many speakers of national prominence, including: James A. Farrell, president of the U. S. Steel Corporation; Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board; Fred I. Kent, of the Bankers' Trust Co., New York; J. J. Donovan, of the Blodel-Donovan Lumber Mills, Bellingham, Wash.; E. A. S. Clarke, president, Lackawanna Steel Co.; C. A. Hinsch, president of the American Bankers' Association; A. C. Bedford, Standard Oil Co. of N. J.; M. E. Farr, president, American Shipbuilding Co., Cleveland; George H. Charls, American Rolling Mills of Middletown, Ohio; John Clausen, of the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco; George H. Smith, president of the American Manufacturers' Export Association; J. K. Armsby, president, California Packing Corporation; W. D. Wheelwright, president, Pacific Export Lumber Company of Portland, Ore.; Frederick J. Koster, president, Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast; J. Louis Schaefer, of W. R. Grace & Co.; W. E. Tarlton, of Brown Shoe Co. of St. Louis; Percival Farquhar, president of the Brazil Railways Co.; Thomas L. Chadbourne, counselor to the War Trade Board; Burwell S. Cutler, Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and F. W. Tausig, chairman of the U. S. Tariff Commission.

TOBACCO OBJECTOR'S FALLACIES.

There is an objector to every scheme, no matter how beneficial it would appear, and this holds true of The Sun Tobacco Fund. "Incog," as our opponent calls himself, or perhaps herself, writes the Boonton, N. J., Times, a lament over the fund's activities. The impression this effort makes is somewhat marred by its concluding suggestion that the fund procures for the profit of the newspapers supporting it a bonus from the tobacco companies' increased sales. Such a notion marks the one forming it as inspired with passion to a degree swaying his judgment.

As for the objections of "Incog" they relate to tobacco itself. He suggests that some mothers of soldier boys would feel hurt to know that their sons had acquired the cigarette habit while fighting the foes of humanity. We may be permitted to doubt whether the psychology of the normal mother is capable of finding room for such a worry in the greater solicitude for his life and in pride over his performances.

For the consideration of "Incog" we might say that some persons sharing his objection to tobacco and even his theories against it have supported the fund upon the ground that tobacco smoking at the present time in any case should not be checked. As for the great majority, they realize and accept the comforts of tobacco both in war and in peace.—Evening Sun.

THE LITTLE FLAG ON OUR HOUSE

The little flag on our house
Is floating all the day
Besides the great big Stars and Stripes;
You can almost hear it say
To all the folks in our street,
As the breezes make it dance:
"Look up and see my one blue star—
We've got a boy in France!"

The little flag on our house,
It floats sometimes at night,
And you can see it 'way up there
When the street lamp shines just right.
And sometimes, 'long towards morning,
When the cop comes by, perchance,
It signals with its one blue star:
"We've got a boy in France!"

The little flag on our house
Will wave, and wave, and wave
Until our boy comes home again,
Or finds in France his grave.
Nay—tho' its blue star turn to gold,
Because of War's grim chance,
It still shall wave to say: "Thank God!
We've got a boy in France!"

WILL SEELY, in Leslie's Weekly.

THE EMPLOYMENT PROBLEM.

Statistically speaking, there is no shortage of labor in the United States. Every important industry in the country is short of men. But there is nearly as much unemployment as usual. In peace times, on the average of the years, there have been 6,000,000 wage earners idle one-third of their time. Or to put it in a less precise but more easily comprehensible form: there are, on the average, 2,000,000 persons out of a job in the United States. Moreover, there are at least 2,000,000 "floaters"—men who have become incapable of remaining in one job for more than a few days or a few weeks. The annual loss from unemployment in peace times has been estimated at $2,000,000,000. There is no satisfactory evidence that in our effort to raise our production from the easy peace-time standard to the high requirement of war we have materially improved this situation.

Nobody knows how many men are out of a job in this country at the present moment. But we feel safe in saying that there are more than 1,000,000. The idle man is not one of our assets; he is one of our liabilities. We owe it to him, to ourselves, to civilization, to help him find a job. The idle machine is not one of our assets; it is one of our liabilities.—Collier's.

Mannie Hull is continuing his good work in making smokers of the Tom Moore Royal. He says the consumers are looking for a milder cigar, and when he gets them to try the Tom Moore he gets a steady convert.

Judell & Co. report that the Fighting Bob has been greatly oversold, but that good shipments are due on the Korea Maru, which is expected to arrive soon, and that these cigars, with those which arrived on the Ecuador last week, but have not yet reached his stock room, are expected to relieve the shortage.

Eddie Allenberg, with B. Goss & Co., who recently was taken ill with appendicitis in San Jose and operated upon in this city, is again able to be about and has started to call upon the trade.

The cigar makers' union is endeavoring to unionize the non-union factories in this city. They recenty levied an assessment of $5 on each member for the campaign and appointed a committee to interview manufacturers and jobbers in their behalf.

LUCKY STRIKE Cigarette—a new flavor. It's toasted. Toasting holds the Burley flavor and adds to it. You don't eat raw meat. You don't drink raw coffee. You prefer toast to soggy bread. 95 per cent of your food is subjected to heat before you eat it, because the heating adds to the flavor and improves the taste. Like the greater part of the food which you place in your mouth, LUCKY STRIKE Cigarettes are subjected to heat. THEY'RE TOASTED. Toasting holds the Burley flavor and adds to the taste.
